The amendment was agreed to.

The last amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In the seventh section strike out "4" and insert "3" in the thirty-sixth line; so that the clause will read as follows:

And the said commissioners shall retain out of said funds a reasonable compensation for their trouble, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency, and not exceeding $3,000 each per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. BROMBERG called for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 13, noes not counted.

Mr. BROMBERG called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency bill; but I will yield to several gentlemen who wish to make requests for unanimous consent.

INDIAN HOME-GUARD REGIMENTS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, presented a petition for the relief of soldiers of the Indian home-guard regiments; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL LAND AND IMMIGRATION COMPANY.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. The name of Colonel Nicholas L. Anderson, of Ohio, is found among the corporators mentioned in the bill to incorporate the International Land and Immigration Company. I have here a letter from Colonel Anderson, in which he states that his name has been thus used without his knowledge or consent. I ask, therefore, that it may be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. POTTER. Is that the same company as to which there have been previous complaints?

The SPEAKER. The same company.

DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. BECK, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3345) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption and sale of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 8, 1872; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ARMISTEAD BURWELL.

Mr. NILES, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3347) for the relief of Armistead Burwell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MONEY PAID TO LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution of the House of April 13, 1874, relative to sums of money paid to certain land-grant railroad companies for the transportation of troops and property of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the communication be laid on the table, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

FREEDMEN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the examiners of the branches of the Freedmen's Savings and Trust Company at Mobile, Montgomery, and other places; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A. M. SALNAVE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, the claim of A. M. Salnave and others for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THEODORE COULSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of May 29, 1872, the claim of Theodore Coulson for Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. RICHMOND obtained leave of absence for ten days; Mr. MARTIN for a fortnight from Monday last, and Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, for ten days.

CAPTAIN SETH BONEY.

On motion of Mr. ARMSTRONG, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Captain Seth Boney.

EVIDENCE IN THE COURTS OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 733) relating to evidence in the courts of the District of Columbia. This is a little bill which passed this House at the last session of Congress with reference to testimony in relation to wills, &c., in the District of Columbia. It comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, and is unanimously reported. There is some necessity to have it passed and I think there will be no objection to it.

The bill was read. It provides that all wills, testaments, and codicils concerning lands, tenements, or hereditaments in the District of Columbia which have heretofore been, or may hereafter be, duly admitted to probate in said District may be read in evidence in any suit therein concerning such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, from the record or from an exemplified copy of such probate, and without further proof of execution; provided that such record shall be only prima facie evidence of the execution of said wills, testaments, and codicils.

The amendment reported by the committee was as follows:

In line 10 after the word "record" insert the words "or exemplification;" so that it will read:

Provided, That such record or exemplification shall be only prima facie evidence of the execution of said wills, testaments, and codicils.

Mr. POTTER. This bill makes the law conform to what it generally is in the States.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is the law in every State of the Union.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELDREDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now insist on my motion that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. NIBLACK in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday the following paragraph had been read and is open to amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Indian Office:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the subsistence and civilization of the Arickarees, Gros Ventres, and Mandans, to be expended in goods and provisions and other articles, as the President may determine, for agricultural and mechanical pursuits, and for the pay of employés, up to June 30, 1874, $25,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. These deficiencies under the heading "Indian Office," are all of the same general character, and I move pro forma to strike out this paragraph for the purpose of asking an explanation not only of this but of the subsequent appropriations under the same head. Experience has demonstrated the fact that a very large portion of the money appropriated for the Indian service, which has one of the highest claims perhaps that exist anywhere on the justice of the nation, instead of going to their benefit is squandered. And when, after the very heavy appropriation made for the present fiscal year, a deficiency is now asked for, it is very natural that an inquiry should be made into the necessity of further appropriations for this service.

While it is necessary that we should make appropriations to the extent to which our treaties with the Indians require us to make them, still, after what we have seen in the management of the Indian fund, when a deficiency comes up, the apprehension is very natural that there has been a misapplication of the funds already appropriated. Every possible safeguard should be thrown around our appropriations for this purpose, for the belief is generally entertained that vast sums of money voted for the Indian service find their way into the pockets of dishonest men instead of going for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. GARFIELD. I appreciate the propriety of the question which the gentleman from Indiana raises, and will make a very brief statement which I think will apply to nearly all these deficiencies for the Indian service. I preface it by this remark: that a wild Indian is no expense to the Government except when we fight him; a civilized Indian, who has come into the ways of civilized life, is no expense, but a benefit to the country. A savage on account of his wildness is out of the pale of the ordinary processes of civilization, and a cultivated, civilized man is an absolute help to the wealth of the nation. But in that middle way, between savagery and civilization, the Indian is an expensive person. It is while he is in the transition state, where he is quitting his old habits of savagery and beginning to learn something about the ways of civilization, that he comes to the point of utter helplessness, and it is precisely at that point that the Government has to come in and help him.

Now, in all our appropriation bills for a series of years—certainly for the last two or three years—there has been a clause like the one which I now read from the bill of last year, which was the same as the bill of the year before: "For this amount, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations;" and then follows an appropriation of a certain amount. That clause, the gentleman will notice, runs through our Indian appropriation bills under the peace policy. It is the policy of the Government to get all these wild-roving Indians in upon reservations and bring them under civilizing influences. During the past year an extraordinarily large number of wild Indians have come on to the reservations, and especially on the two great northern and southern reservations. The largest accession of that kind was among the Apaches, the Kiowas, and the Comanches. A very large number of wild Indians have been brought on to the reservations, and it requires a certain amount per capita to feed and take care of them. The number which it is necessary to provide for in this manner exceeds what we expected, and hence there is of course a deficiency, and to that extent it is a legitimate deficiency and one that we ought to be glad to have happen. We should always be glad to have the Indians abondon their predatory and wandering habits and come as far as possible under the influence of civilization.

I believe that the remark I have made in regard to the Apache and kindred Indians explains nine-tenths of all the deficiencies that come under the head of the Indian service in this bill. There are other special points that will be explained from time to time as explanation may be called for. The committee have gone very carefully and thoroughly over these items and have reduced the amount, and in doing this they have been indebted to the very able and valuable work of the sub-committee that had charge of the Indian appropriation bill for the preparation of this portion of the deficiency bill. I will yield what time I have remaining, if any, to my colleague on the committee from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Missouri proceeds I desire to make a single inquiry. I find that a portion of the appropriation for these tribes is for the payment of employés. I take it for granted that expenses may become necessary in supplying goods to the Indians and in their transportation, but this contains a provision not only for the purchase of goods but for the pay of employés during the fiscal year. I do not see how any necessity can have arisen for an appropriation for that purpose, or for the employment of a larger number of persons by the Government than was in contemplation at the time the regular appropriation bill for the current year was passed. I would ask the gentleman how it happens that it is necessary to provide a deficiency for the pay of employés?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. My friend from Indiana required some explanation of this item in the deficiency bill, and I propose to give him briefly an explanation of why the committee deemed it necessary to appropriate this amount. The gentleman will remember that there are twenty-one hundred of these Indians. They are up in Montana and they are designated by the Army officers and peace commissioners and everybody else who knows them by the title of "good Indians;" that is to say, they are peacefully disposed and do not give the white settlers any trouble, and there is no reason in the world why anything should be withheld from them on that ground. Last year there was appropriated under the treaty of July 16, 1868, which has never been published, I believe, the amount of $35,000 for feeding, civilizing, and supporting generally these people. That was not quite enough, and in fact the Department believed that they could not run through this year with less than $50,000 more. The committee, after looking at all the facts and thoroughly investigating the amount that had been already expended and the number of persons necessary to be supported there, believe that the Department could get along with the amount proposed to be appropriated in this bill, $25,000, which is half the amount asked by the Department. We believe that by the proper expenditure of that amount of money they can get along until the close of the fiscal year.

I think that there are no Indians in that whole country that deserve as favorable consideration at the hands of this Congress as do these people. They are peaceably disposed, and they are making rapid strides toward civilization. The gentleman asks the question, why it is necessary to provide for the pay of employés. It is absolutely necessary, as has been demonstrated, if you would lead these people rapidly forward toward civilization, that there should be persons to instruct them in the things practiced by civilized people. There are but few persons employed there, and but a small amount of money is expended.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but these persons which are provided for and the appropriations which are made for them——

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The gentleman will remember that under the treaty of 1868 appropriations have been made in the lump. The probability here is that in making these expenditures during the present year the amount has run short; it may have been on the pay of these employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any definite estimate for the pay of additional salaries for persons to be employed in connection with these Indians?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. There is no definite salary provided for. This is for the regular salary, for the balance of salary that remains unpaid for the fiscal year. For example, they pay the man who has charge of the farm to teach these people the art of agriculture eight or nine hundred dollars a year. The gentleman will remember that that is not large pay when you take into consideration the fact that he must have his own family there and is practically living a great way from civilization.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would not that be provided for in the appropriation made for this year?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The appropriation was made for last year in the lump. I will state to the gentleman that the estimate is made in this language:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended in goods, provisions, and other articles, as the President may determine, for agricultural and manufacturing pursuits, and for the pay of employés up to June 30, 1874.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my amendment; but I certainly will have to move to strike out the words "for pay of employés" unless there is some other explanation given.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to say that in the appropriation bill of last year the very same language occurs precisely; and at the end of the clause the amount appropriated is fixed at $75,000. The gentleman will find that on page 440. We never have distributed the amount, so much for employés and so much for something else. We enumerate all the objects to which the money may be applied, and then appropriate an aggregate sum. The sum appropriated has fallen short; and in order to provide for the deficiency we simply repeat all the words used in the other bill, so that the money may be applied to whichever of these things a deficiency may occur in; we cannot tell which one it may be. It would not be safe to strike out any one, for it may fall in part on all of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to subsist and properly care for the Kansas Indians, including agricultural assistance, pay of employés, and the erection of a mill on their new reservation in the Indian Territory, said amount to be refunded to the United States from the proceeds of the sale of their lands in Kansas so soon as the same are available, $20,000.

Mr. BECK. I move to strike out the sum of "$50,000." When the regular appropriation bill was before us the item of $50,000 was added to the $200,000 that was given for the subsistence of these tribes, upon the assertion that it would be necessary to add that much to the amount originally appropriated, in order to subsist and feed and transport supplies to these tribes. At the same time, and in the same bill, we gave $67,000 in one item, under what you call treaties, (I am not going to speak about them any more,) and $47,000 to other tribes under treaties. You are here adding $50,000 more in the deficiency bill, after putting in $50,000 by an amendment to the original Indian appropriation bill. Why was not $100,000 more put in there instead of $50,000?

I understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] just now to say that the reason why the deficiencies were called for was because these tribes were being gathered in so rapidly during this year. He instanced the Kiowas and Comanches as a portion of the tribes gathered in so rapidly. While he was talking I turned to the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for this year to where he speaks of these tribes now provided for, the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cheyennes. He declares in his statement, on pages 6 and 7, that the tribes are marauding to such an extent that it will be necessary to turn them over to the military. So far from his giving any information that these tribes are being gathered in to an extent which makes this additional appropriation necessary, the report shows that whatever may be said of the Mandans, the Arickarees, and the other Indians the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] talked about, (and they have been good Indians,) as to the Kiowas, Comanches, and Cheyennes, they are on the war-path to-day, and the Commissioner so states. And yet you propose to add $50,000 to the appropriation. You gave all that was required in the regular Indian appropriation bill, and now you propose to give $50,000. I would like to know first why it was not made $100,000 more in the original bill, if necessary; and second, why it is that the Commissioner makes this report of their condition in the face of what is said by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] asks why this amendment was not put in the original appropriation bill. I was not here at the time and had nothing to do with making out the original bill, and know nothing about it. But what we did the other day was for the next fiscal year, and this is a deficiency for the present year.

Mr. BECK. That is true; I made a mistake in that regard. That was for the next fiscal year, and this is for this year. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. As the subject has been mentioned I will call attention to the following communication from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a special estimate for appropriation of funds to subsist and properly care for the Kiowa and Comanche, Cheyenne and Arapahoe, and Wichita and other affiliated bands of Indians in the Indian Territory, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874. The amount required is $75,000.

I also transmit a copy of a letter, dated the 4th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and accompanying copy of a communication, dated the 10th October, 1873, from the superintendent of Indian affairs, southern superintendency, reporting the necessity for furnishing the Indians referred to with subsistence, for the purchase of which an appropriation is asked, and agreeably to the recommendation of the Commissioner, the estimate is respectfully submitted for the favorable consideration and action of Congress.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Estimate of appropriation required for subsisting certain tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874.

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary to subsist and properly care for the Kiowa and Comanche, Cheyenne and Arapahoe, and Wichita and other affiliated bands of Indians in the Indian Territory, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874..... $75,000

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., December 4, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to present herewith copies of a letter from Enoch Hoag, superintendent of Indian affairs, central superintendency, dated the 29th October last, by which it appears that to subsist and properly care for the Arapaho, Cheyenne, Apache, Kiowa, Comanche, and Wichita Indians in the Indian Territory, up to the end of the present fiscal year, additional means will have to be provided.

By the Indian appropriation act of February 14, 1873, (Statutes, volume 17, page 449,) the sum of $200,000 was set apart for the purchase of subsistence supplies for said Indians, including transportation of the same, of which amount there remains on the books of this office a balance of $47,892.92.

The superintendent estimates that 50 per cent. of the amount contracted for will be required, in addition, of bacon, coffee, and sugar, and 25 per cent. of flour, to last until 1st of May next, which, computed at present contract rates, would involve the sum of $34,169.65. Adding to this sum the amount of liabilities already contracted for beef and flour, and subject to payment hereafter, namely, $52,533, and the amount necessary to feed the Indians during the two remaining months of May and June next, say $26,382, the aggregate will be $113,084, from which, after deducting the balance of $47,892, reported on hand as above, will leave a deficiency of $65,192, on account of supplies to be provided, exclusive of the cost of transportation to the various agencies, which will probably not be less than $10,000.

Taking the above data as a basis for the calculation, I have caused to be prepared, and herewith submit, an estimate for the sum of $75,000, with request that if the same meets your approval it be laid before Congress for favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. R. CLUM,
Acting Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, CENTRAL SUPERINTENDENCY,
Lawrence, Kansas, Tenthmonth 29, 1873.

Hon. E. P. SMITH, Commissioner:

I call attention to the fact that the amount of supplies purchased for the Kiowas, Comanches, Apaches, affiliated Wichitas, Cheyennes, and Arapahoes, is very much less in quantity than the aggregate amount for the same Indians last year. It is also important to consider that many of these Indians have, until recently, obtained much of their subsistence on the plains, in consequence of which a surplus was left in their commissaries last year. But most of these Indians, last autumn, were required to locate and remain near their agency, and were largely deprived of procuring meat and robes; and the Cheyennes and Arapahoes will probably be subject to like restrictions.

It therefore is very important that sufficient subsistence be in the several commissaries, and the purchase and transportation of the same ought not to be deferred, as it will be impossible to move the supplies in the spring months in consequence of usual high water and absence of forage. It is estimated that 50 per cent. of the amount purchased will be required, in addition, of coffee, bacon, and sugar, and 25 per cent. of flour, provided the Indians referred to be required to remain near their respective agencies, as they should do. The subsistence solicited will be consumed on or near 1st of Fifthmonth, 1874.

Respectfully,

ENOCH HOAG,
Superintendent.

The Clerk read as follows:

For incidental expenses of the Indian service in Washington Territory, $4,836.34.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Before we pass from this series of appropriations for incidental expenses of the Indian service, I desire to have from the Committee on Appropriations some statement showing what these expenses include and what necessity there is for this appropriation. I understand the committee is prepared to make some explanation on this subject.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. All these items from line 504 to the close of the appropriations for deficiencies of the Indian Department are not deficiencies of the current year at all but are to pay outstanding indebtedness for and on account of the Indian service prior to June 30, 1873. Among these deficiencies which occurred previous to last year are several amounts for incidental expenses in the different Territories. These amounts aggregate $693,838.28. On account of the amount being so large, the committee received with a great deal of disfavor the proposition for this appropriation; and we desire to say candidly that if the Government could honorably have avoided meeting these deficiencies we should certainly have been compelled to report against them. We examined the accounts so far as it was possible for us to do so; and we find the deficiencies are for amounts that have actually been expended. People have furnished supplies under contracts with the department; and in many cases they have been deprived of their money (and this is especially the case with those who have furnished supplies for the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico) for over two years. It appeared before us upon the testimony of gentlemen who were entitled to full credit that many of these people who have furnished supplies have been compelled, in order to preserve their credit, to pay as high as 30 per cent. during a portion of the time on money which they have borrowed to meet their contracts. The department held that after contracts had been entered into, the contractors upon the demand of the Indian Department were required to fulfill the contracts, although there was no money to pay them; and many men have been absolutely ruined by the delay of the department in paying these demands. Of course the delay was occasioned by there being no money to meet the payments under the contracts. With this view of the facts presented to the committee it was impossible for us, in justice to our own citizens, to refuse to allow these amounts.

In order that the Committee on Appropriations may be justified in their action, we desire to say that the aggregate amount of Indian deficiencies for 1873 was $1,277,752.71; the amount of deficiencies for 1874 is $1,251,438.28, deducting from which $693,838.28, which is the amount of deficiencies for prior years, it leaves the amount of Indian deficiencies proper for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, $557,600—much less, we are gratified to say, than they have been for many years past.

There is another fact that we desire to mention in this connection. It is disagreeable for any Congress to make appropriations for deficiencies. Appropriations of this character have been on the decrease for two or three years past; and it is to be hoped that in a year or two at the furthest deficiencies coming from this department (after the admonition which we have given to it in the regular appropriation bill) will cease altogether. Deficiencies are disagreeable items for Congress to pass upon; and this department of the Government, as well as all others, should constantly put forth every effort to avoid creating any deficiency. The Departments should be required to come here and state in detail the amounts that they require to run the several branches of the Government; and upon such showing alone should appropriations be made. We are enabled to say that we hope this will be the rule in a very short time with reference to this department. It is one in which there must be some flexibility, because there are occasionally extraordinary emergencies which cannot be foreseen either by Congress or by the head of the department when the estimates are made. One such was the necessity of removing the Modocs from their former reservation to the Indian Territory. But it is to be presumed that the Indian question is so far settled that the department will not be called upon to ask for these deficiencies to any great extent in future.

I wish to repeat that these items from line 504 down to the end of these Indian deficiencies are to satisfy the actual demands of persons in the Territories of Montana, New Mexico, and Arizona who have already furnished supplies and have been for a long time deprived of their money. This Government cannot justly refuse to pay them.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the survey of the exterior boundaries of Indian reservations and subdivisions of the same, being for surveys in the Indian Territory embraced within the lands ceded by the Cherokee, Seminole, and Creek tribes of Indians, being a deficiency for the present and prior years, $45,000.

Mr. AVERILL. I move to amend the paragraph just read by adding:

For continuing the collection of statistics and historical data respecting the Indians of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing this appropriation.

Mr. AVERILL. I can only say that this service is performed by a gentleman who has been in the employ of the Government for a year, and the appropriation which I propose is to cover a deficiency. It is a matter connected with carrying on the department. Ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and have been obliged to perform a part of the duty resting on that committee, there has been an obvious deficiency in obtaining information relative to Indian history. About a year ago the Secretary of the Interior designated a gentleman of know ability and character, and having large experience in this business, who has since been employed in this service. The results of his work have been very satisfactory; and it is only to be regretted that the labor is not completed. The Secretary of the Interior suggested to the Committee on Indian Affairs the propriety of the appropriation, and I hope there will be no objection to it; for no expenditure of such an amount can be made that will conduce more to the public interest or be of greater benefit to the Indians, as this work will become a guide, to a certain extent, in order to legislation upon Indian subjects.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the additional point of order that this amendment is not only unauthorized by any law, but is not germane to the bill. It has no connection with deficiencies.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to make this further explanation: that this is not a new work, but one which has been in progress for several years, and for carrying on which Congress has, I understand, made several appropriations. Therefore it is not a new work, but attempting to carry forward what already has been appropriated for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to see gentlemen show either of two things, either a law authorizing this appropriation of money or an appropriation for the same purpose during the last fiscal year. There may have been something of the sort a quarter of a century ago, and there may have been since then an appropriation for it, but certainly there is no law on the subject and no appropriation last year.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state why this was not put in the Indian appropriation bill. In the first place, the attention of the sub-committee was not called to it until after the bill had been made up and gone to the printer. It had not been printed but had been sent to the printer, and the committee did not care to recall it for that purpose alone. I will remark to my friend from Indiana if he had been on the Committee on Appropriations and gone through an extended investigation——

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire to discuss the merits of this question or the point of order. I am opposed to this appropriation bill taking money out of the Treasury without warrant and in defiance of our rules.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire in justification of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations to make a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the statement being made, but I do not waive my point of order.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I was about to remark that if my friend from Indiana had spent the time some of us have in looking over Indian treaties and the history of these Indian tribes he certainly would not object to this appropriation. The object is to complete a chronological history of these Indian tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any body engaged on this work at the present time?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Yes, sir; and he has been engaged on it for eighteen months. He has not only been engaged in this business but has been partly paid for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to see the law which ever authorized the appropriation of a dollar of money for this purpose.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. He has been paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; it was an unlawful use of the contingent fund to pay out any portion of it for such an object. There is no law in favor of such an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. From statements made the Chair will have to rule the point of order not well taken and hold the amendment to be in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I will say in regard to this, although the Committee on Appropriations has not considered this amendment, at least not acted on it as a committee, the unanimous action of another committee having charge specially of Indian affairs was a strong reason to my mind why we should adopt this amendment.

Furthermore, sir, one of the troubles I have experienced, and I suppose every other gentleman here has experienced in studying the vexed Indian question and being intelligent about it at all, is to know something about these various Indian tribes. Who knows where the Mandans, Arickarees, and the Kickapoos came from, where each tribe is now, and what kind of a tribe it is, whether large or small? Who knows where these tribes all came from and where they now are, or where we can find any history anywhere which will give us a condensed historical account of them? In the annual reports you get of course an account of the present condition of these tribes, and sometimes scraps of history; but a collection of compact, well-digested historical statements, chronological statements about these various Indian tribes will be of immense importance to us in understanding this Indian question. There are tribes we are now appropriating for up in the Rocky Mountains which once lived in New York, afterward in Ohio, latterly in Michigan and just across the Mississippi, carrying traditions and a history of their own with them, which are now mixed as a small remnant with large tribes. A chronological history of these tribes would be of great value to us. No one can read the chapter of Bancroft's history of the aborigines and of the country in the older colonial days and look at the mass he there compiled with the greatest care and labor, showing the tribal distribution of the Indian nations one hundred and fifty or two hundred years ago, without feeling himself instructed as to the condition of Indian affairs then. If this would enable us to get such a mass now, if it would enable us to obtain it so we would have at one view a picture of what their condition is and a brief chronological history of these tribes, we would be able to know something more about them.

In this connection let me say we have treated the Indians as though they were a repetition of the same unit. We act as though an Indian is an Indian wherever you find him, failing to recognize there is a marked difference between them. The hill Indian, an Indian born with all his associations among the mountains, is scarcely able to subsist himself upon the plains. The Indian on the staked plains of the South hardly knows how to live in the timber lands or in the mountains. Yet we undertake to gather a whole miscellaneous group of tribes of Indians and put them upon one reservation, where if one tribe can live because the surroundings are what they have been accustomed to, the others are unable to thrive because they are surrounded by nothing they have been accustomed to. It is like taking a tropical plant and planting it in the snows of Maine, or taking a hardy plant of the North and planting it under the Equator.

Now, if we are to behave intelligently to these Indians, we ought to know something about the locality of their tribes and their history, and I believe this small appropriation will help us. I am in favor of it.

Mr. SHANKS. I think this appropriation will save thousands of dollars to the public Treasury. I have studied the Indian question somewhat and have found troubles and embarrassments at every step, just for the want of what is here provided for. I do not think that we can appropriate that much money for the Indian service more wisely for any other purpose. I have noticed appropriations for a part of a tribe, speaking of them as a tribe, when in fact they were governed by treaty provisions with other tribes. I believe, sir, that we have often, on account of misunderstanding and want of understanding the real condition of these Indians, appropriated thousands of dollars where we need only have appropriated hundreds. I hope this appropriation will be made.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs if this gentleman has been already engaged in preparing this work, and who he is?

Mr. AVERILL. The gentleman is Dr. Thomas Foster, a resident of Minnesota, a gentleman whose ability is unquestionable.

Mr. KASSON. Is he connected with the Indian service?

Mr. AVERILL. He has been connected with the Indians and has been among them engaged on this work.

Mr. KASSON. Connected with the Indian Bureau?

Mr. AVERILL. Not at all. That is the only connection he has with the Indian service. His services have been exclusively in this line, and, as has already been properly remarked by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] the work he has already done is of incalculable utility and will save thousands of dollars to the Government.

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying a few words on this question. I did not understand from the gentleman from Minnesota whether this gentleman has been in the employment of the Indian Bureau otherwise than for this purpose.

Mr. AVERILL. Not at all. He was appointed exclusively for that purpose.

Mr. KASSON. And paid out of the contingent fund?

Mr. AVERILL. I do not know that he has been paid at all. The deficiency exists.

Mr. KASSON. Is then this $3,500 additional pay for what he has done for the remainder of the fiscal year, or is it pay for the whole work?

Mr. AVERILL. It is to pay for what he has already done. Part of it is for salary and part for traveling expenses in collecting this information.

Mr. KASSON. But it appears that he has already been paid to some extent out of the contingent fund. This conversational debate, however, has wandered altogether away from the point of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. The point of order has been decided.

The CHAIRMAN. Giving the amendment the benefit of the doubt, the Chair has overruled the point of order; and this debate has been upon its merits.

Mr. KASSON. Then I will say that it seems to me this work ought to be done through and by the Indian Bureau independently of a separate appropriation. The amendment is very large, if for a deficiency. If this gentleman, whose competency I have no reason to doubt, and the value of whose work I am as ready to appreciate as any other gentleman can be, has been doing the work under an appointment for which he is regularly paid, it is unusual, to say the least, to provide a large sum of money to cover the past, present, and future, with no more knowledge than we have of the amount of work done and the time required to do it. It seems to me that the very information sought for must be obtained from the files of the Indian Office, and in part from the reports already published, and must in its nature be to a large extent a compilation of the existing facts connected with the history of the Indians. And if a compilation, I think it should be done by some of the existing paid officers of the service already in the employment of the Government.

I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota that the work, if already done as it ought to be, will be a very valuable work. But it seems to me we should not make a large appropriation here in this indefinite manner for the past, present, and future, and put it in a deficiency bill. The deficiency should be only for the services of past years. We are about to pass another appropriation bill for the coming year, the sundry civil appropriation bill, in which this matter might more properly be presented.

Mr. AVERILL. What would be the difference, when it is shown that there is a necessity for an appropriation, if we shall pass it now?

Mr. KASSON. There is a difference, because we do not know now how long this gentleman has been at work, or how much he has done or how much he has been paid for it.

Mr. AVERILL. He has been to my knowledge exclusively engaged on this work and nothing else for a year.

Mr. KASSON. How long he should be paid in the future is also a matter of doubt. It seems to me we are not in possession of sufficient information on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have appropriated for this present fiscal year in the Indian bill $5,541,418 for this Indian service. We propose to appropriate by this bill $1,465,476 more. Therefore we propose to appropriate for the Indians for the present fiscal year the enormous sum of $7,006,894.

We have agents in connection with every one of the Indian tribes. We have reports from every one of them, I believe, to the Interior Department, giving a detailed account of the condition of the Indian tribes. We have had such reports for many years past. We have also a body of Christian people, as we are assured, all over the western frontier, inquiring into the condition of the Indians, and making very intelligent reports to the Government.

We are told now that out of the contingent fund appropriated for the Indian service money has been paid for the preparation of a history of these Indian tribes, and it is proposed, without any information as to how much money has been paid, or as to what salary is being paid to this person, or as to what work has been done, and what length of time he will be employed in the future, to make an appropriation of $3,500. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he thinks he is serving the country wisely and well as chairman of that leading committee in allowing such a sum to be appropriated in an appropriation bill without any estimate whatever? I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who ought to stand between the public Treasury and those who are disposed to plunder it, if he has any knowledge on this subject at all? Does he know how much has been paid to this man?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have already said that I have no knowledge as to this matter, and that it has not been before our committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then can the gentleman in his position give his sanction to an appropriation of money for this purpose for the first time without any knowledge at all except the indefinite information which we have received from the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. AVERILL,] that one of his constituents is engaged in this work?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have great confidence in the Committee on Indian Affairs and in the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can the gentleman from Minnesota himself tell us how much has already been paid to Mr. Foster?

Mr. AVERILL. Let me say that this gentleman has never, to my knowledge, cast his vote in my favor, although he is a constituent of mine.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman has not said how much has been paid to his constituent already.

Mr. AVERILL. I think last year the expense was something like $3,000; that is my impression.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then why does he want $3,500 for his salary for this year?

Mr. AVERILL. It is for contingent expenses, and the Secretary of the Interior thinks it is necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman show us the estimate of the Secretary of the Interior for this purpose?

Mr. AVERILL. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has he estimated for this amount?

Mr. AVERILL. He has.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman send up his recommendation to the Clerk to be read?

Mr. AVERILL. It is in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have some one responsible for this appropriation. There seems to be an army of men who are determined in some form or other to be pensioned on the public Treasury. We already have annual reports made from the various tribes, and here is a new source of expenditure proposed to be inaugurated.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on the amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw my amendment in order to enable the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] to offer one.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the compensation of the person collecting such data shall not exceed $2,000 and his actual, individual, and necessary traveling expenses.

I will state briefly the object of that amendment. This is substantially creating a new office, one not now known to the law. This is undoubtedly a very valuable work; I make no question in regard to the importance of these statistics; but if we are establishing an office it is proper, it seems to me, to fix a limit to the salary of the officer. The work will be a somewhat expensive one at best. In addition to the salary, my amendment provides for actual and necessary traveling expenses. Whenever the report is made to Congress it will have to be printed, and so it will be attended with expense; and if it is prepared by a competent person it will probably be worth what it costs. Certainly the Interior Department—judging from the way in which their estimates have been made up hitherto—are somewhat in need of information in respect to the matters they have in charge, or they could send estimates here which would not result in a deficiency amounting to one-fifth or one-fourth of the sum appropriated. If we can get some information which will enable them more accurately to determine what it will cost to take care of the Indians, and to pay the expenses of the Indian service for the year, we shall have expended this money to some purpose; but it occurs to me that we ought to limit the salary, and hence I offer this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to the amendment; on the contrary it seems to me to be right, but does not my friend know that this after all will be only a compilation from the reports made from year to year to the Interior Department?

Is not that all the history that can possibly be furnished of our Indian tribes? Is not this information all in the Interior Department now, as full and as complete as any one citizen can possibly get together, if not more so?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have no doubt it will be more or less a compilation. I do not suppose this person is going to make a new history entirely. He will be obliged to collect his information from data already in existence, and bring it together. Whether that compilation will be valuable or not will depend very much upon the man employed, I agree. But it appears to me that it is possible to get information that will be valuable. If we are to have an appropriation it should be limited.

Mr. KASSON. I suggest to the gentleman to add to his amendment the words "to be paid out of the contingent fund," so as not to make a new appropriation.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have no objection to that personally. But this is a deficiency bill, and I suppose the contingent fund has been exhausted, or we would not be asked to appropriate for a deficiency. This has been paid hitherto out of the contingent fund; but if that is exhausted there is nothing to be paid out.

Mr. AVERILL. I accept as a part of my amendment that which is moved by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of having read two letters called for by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter, dated the 13th instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, reporting that there are no funds at the disposal of his office that can be applied to the payment of the salary of a historiographer of the Indian Department, whose services are represented to be highly desirable and whose work, when completed, will prove of great value to the Government.

I concur in the recommendation of the Commissioner that legislation be had authorizing this Department to employ a suitable and competent person in the position herein indicated, and commend the subject to the favorable consideration of your committee, with the view to an appropriation by Congress of a sum sufficient for his compensation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN T. AVERILL,
Chairman Committee Indian Affairs House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1874.

SIR: Referring to office report of February 17, 1873, relative to the appointment of a historiographer of this department, I have the honor to state that I am satisfied that the work contemplated to be performed by such an appointment is highly desirable, and when completed will be of great value to the Government.

In this connection I would state that Dr. Thomas Foster, of Minnesota, has been employed as "special agent" for several months past, and has collected much valuable information respecting Indian tribes, which he is at present reducing to proper form for reference and preservation. He is capable of continuing and completing the work in a satisfactory manner.

There are no funds at the disposal of this office applicable to the continuance of such service, and I therefore respectfully recommend that the necessary steps be taken to have the Department authorized by proper legislation to employ a suitable person for the purpose, and that a sufficient sum be appropriated for his compensation.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD P. SMITH,
Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now make the point of order upon the records which have been presented.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; because the Chair was told that the regular appropriation for this purpose has been expended, and now we find that this office is now provided for for the first time. According to the letters just read we find that no money has yet been appropriated for this purpose. I make the point of order that this is providing for a new work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question is involved in a great deal of doubt, but will give the benefit of this doubt to the amendment, and submit it to the Committee of the Whole on its merits.

The amendment as modified was read, as follows:

For continuing the collection of statistics and historical data respecting the Indians of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500: Provided, That the compensation of the person collecting such data shall not exceed $2,000 a year, and his actual individual and necessary traveling expenses.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 33, noes 4; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist upon a further count. This is creating a new office, or making a new salary—an increase of expenditure; and I insist upon a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. AVERILL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 100, noes 49.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3139) for the relief of the owners of the steam ferry-boat A. Burton.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3160) in reference to the operations of the shipping-commissioners act approved June 7, 1872.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in the following:

A bill (S. No. 745) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the schooner Jennie Speer to that of Santa Rosa;

A bill (S. No. 793) for the relief of Philip S. Wells, medical inspector of the United States Navy; and

A resolution authorizing Spencer F. Baird, United States commissioner of fish and fisheries, to have the engravings of his report executed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session and the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the following:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the payment of Navy pensions, $75,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call attention to the following, as showing the necessity for this appropriation:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a communication dated the 20th instant, from the Acting Commissioner of Pensions, setting forth the necessity for a deficiency appropriation of $75,000, required for the payment of Navy pensions during the remainder of the current fiscal year.

It appears from the statement of the Acting Commissioner that this deficiency is mainly the result of recent legislation by Congress, whereby the pensions granted to widows of naval officers are increased on account of minor children, and of the adjudication of an unusual number of original Navy pension claims.

The Acting Commissioner represents the necessity for making the appropriation available on or before the 15th proximo, and I therefore have the honor to recommend the insertion in the pending deficiency bill of the following item, namely:

For the payment of Navy pensions to widows and others, $75,000, to be available upon the passage of this act.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

C. DELANO,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 20, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to submit the following statement showing the present condition of the appropriation for the payment of Navy pensions for the current fiscal year, and to request that you will ask for an additional appropriation sufficient to meet the deficiency:

The amount appropriated was		$480,000 00
Of this sum there had been disbursed to the 31st ultimo as follows:
For Navy invalid pensions	$130,573 28
For Navy widows and minors' pensions	282,544 98
Total disbursements during the first three-quarters of fiscal year		413,118 26
Balance remaining for last quarter		66,881 74
Estimated amount required		137,705 75
Deficit, if expenditures of fourth quarter are equal to the average of the three preceding quarters		70,824 01

This amount will certainly be required, and to guard against the possibility of its being insufficient, the appropriation should be $75,000. This deficit, anticipated in my last annual report, (see page 5,) results principally from the unexpected demand upon the appropriation, to meet the increases allowed by the act of March 3, 1873, granting two dollars per month to minor children of officers.

An unusually large number of original invalid claims have also been presented and allowed, and many invalid pensions have been increased.

The additions to the Navy roll during the nine months between June 30, 1873, and March 30, 1874, were as follows:

Invalid—original claims allowed	107	Annual amount	$10,254 00
Invalid—increase claims allowed	85	Annual amount	4,760 50
Widows—original claims allowed	59	Annual amount	9,120 00
Widows—increase claims allowed	261	Annual amount	11,970 00
Total number claims allowed	512	Total amount	36,104 50

By this it will be seen that the pensions granted since the commencement of the fiscal year amount to $36,104.50 annually. Upon the first payment, from one to seven years' arrears are due, (the larger number of increases to minor children, commencing July 25, 1866;) consequently the demand upon the pension appropriation has been two or three times the annual amount of the pensions.

The present fund is so nearly exhausted, that the appropriation asked for should be available by the 15th proximo, else the payment of the Navy pensions will be interrupted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JAMES LOCKEY,
Acting Commissioner.

The honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The Clerk read the following:

To pay John W. Wright for rent of building corner of G and Eighth streets for one year, $9,000

Mr. SHANKS. I move to strike out the paragraph just read, for the purpose of saying that this building was built by money obtained by this man by plundering the members, widows, and minor children of the first, second, and third regiments of Indian volunteers, principally Cherokees, and it is now proposed that the Government shall pay $9,000 a year rent for this building.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it is going too far to say that because a man got his money so and so we will not pay the rent of his building which we occupy; it is going almost as far back as original sin. You might say that because when he was a boy he stole apples from his neighbor's orchard, or that his grandfather did something wrong, therefore we will not pay him what we owe him. I do not raise any question with the gentleman in regard to the statements made by him.

Mr. SHANKS. Those statements are true. The Government is renting a building from a man who plundered the Indian soldiers who served in the war, and the widows and orphans of those soldiers. The proofs of that plunder are in the Interior Department and Department of Justice to-day, and the Government is renting a building of a man who paid for building it by the plunder of those whom the Government were bound to protect.

In behalf of the Indians of the country, in behalf of justice, I call the attention of the committee to this matter. I hope that hereafter the Government will have more respect for itself than to rent a building from a man who is a plunderer by nature.

Mr. TYNER. I have no reply whatever to make to my colleague, [Mr. SHANKS,] except to say that the Interior Department rented this building from John W. Wright, and that the rent is due. If the Committee of the Whole believe that we should repudiate this claim against the Government upon the unsupported statement of a gentleman on this floor, they must arrive at that result by a process of reasoning which I cannot understand. My colleague does not pretend to deny that this building has been erected and is now standing in the city of Washington; that the Interior Department has rented it at a certain price, and that the rent is now due. It seems to me utterly ridiculous to urge against the payment of a claim of this kind any such reason as my colleague has presented.

Mr. NESMITH. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. My friend from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] objects, as I understand, to the payment of this claim for the singular reason that the claimant is a "plunderer by nature." Why, sir, I should like to know how much money would be paid out under this appropriation bill if every man of that class was excluded? As I understand, this is a legitimate claim for the use of a building. The gentleman from Indiana set up here the allegation that this man has perpetrated some wrong which ought to exclude him from obtaining pay for the use of this building. If such a plea in abatement is to be urged, if an allegation of that kind is to be set up as a reason why this man should not be paid the rent that is due to him, why should not every man who brings a claim here have his private character investigated?

The gentleman from Indiana says that this man is a public plunderer. There is, however, no evidence on that point before this body. I take it that we shall not undertake to decide a question of that kind on the mere statement of any individual. If this man is a public plunderer he ought to be indicted and punished in the courts. I understand that he has been indicted; but the charges, so far as they have been brought to trial, have failed. Personally I know nothing about this case; but I like to see all men treated with fairness. Even if this man had been convicted as a public plunderer I do not know that the fact would debar him from the right to payment for use of a building rented from him by the Government. I am speaking now upon a general principle of justice; not that I care or know anything about this claim. But I think it wrong to assail a man in the presence of the country, in the style of the gentleman from Indiana, without supporting the allegations by any proof.

Mr. SHANKS. There is on the files of this House evidence of what I have said, that this man did plunder the First, Second, and Third Regiments of Indian Volunteers. He wronged them to a degree absolutely enormous. He was appointed by the Secretary of the Interior as attorney to collect the bounties due to those three regiments, and he formed a combination by which he absolutely kept large portions of that money in his own hands and appropriated it to his own use. The proof that he has committed forgeries and procured others to commit forgeries in this matter, and has hired public officers in the Indian country to qualify men who appeared only by deputy of his own son and accomplices, have been presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] now a member of this House and by the Indian Committee of the last House.

I have brought up this question, because I intend to put upon the record of this House the fact that a man who has thus committed these offenses is to-day the recipient of public money from the Treasury while indictments for his crimes have been standing against him. He has, I believe, been tried on sixteen out of about two hundred of those indictments, and perhaps there are four or five hundred more that ought to be brought against him. I call attention to this fact, because I desire that these Indians shall not be wronged without remedy and without protest. I want the country to know that here is a man drawing money from the public Treasury as rent for a building built with the money plundered from the Indians.

I might ask how this item happens to be a deficiency; for we appropriated last year, I believe, for the rent of this building, and we have done so I believe for two or three years. I objected once to the appropriation two or three years ago; but now we find the appropriation on this bill again. I am not, however, raising any question in that regard. I do not antagonize any of the work of the Committee on Appropriations; I think that they have done admirably and have saved money to the country very largely. But I did want to call attention to the fact that the Government is to-day paying rent for a building erected with money stolen from the poor Indian soldiers, their widows and orphans.

Mr. NESMITH. The proposition of my friend from Indiana seems to be that this man has robbed the Indians, and therefore we must rob him.

Mr. GARFIELD. There was no appropriation for this item last year; it was not in the estimates.

Mr. NESMITH. Even admitting all that has been alleged by the gentleman from Indiana, I do not see that it constitutes any reason why the Government should rob this man. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SHANKS, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of official postage-stamps and stamped envelopes to supply a deficiency of last quarter of the current fiscal year, $180,000.

Mr. TYNER. I move to amend by adding after the clause just read the following:

For advertising, $20,000.

If the Committee of the Whole desire any information about this amendment I can give it without any difficulty; but I do not suppose any is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I move the following amendment, to come in after the amendment that has just been adopted:

For purchase of postage-stamps to be used in the transmission of the Agricultural Reports of the years 1872 and 1873 through the mails, $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be drawn from the Treasury and applied as herein specified except upon the order of the Commissioner of Agriculture in pursuance of requests from Senators and Members of Congress, specifying particularly when and to whom such reports shall be sent: And provided further, No Senator or Member of Congress shall be entitled to so transmit more than a proportionate share of said reports.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is an appropriation not provided for by existing law.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I wish to give notice that I will endeavor to move that amendment to the post-office appropriation bill as soon as it comes up, and will ask for a vote of the House upon it.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the Chair rule the amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order made upon the bill by the gentleman from Ohio is well taken.

Mr. CONGER. On what ground does the Chair rule that the amendment is not in order; is it that members do not want to send out the Agricultural Reports?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order upon the ground that there is no existing law providing for the appropriation, and it is therefore not in order, under the rule, to an appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDICIAL.

For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia; and also for jurors and witnesses, and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned; of prosecutions for offenses committed against the United States; for the safe-keeping of prisoners, and for defraying the expenses which may be incurred in the enforcement of the act approved February 28, 1871, entitled "An act to amend an act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes,'" or the act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1872, $20,000; and for the same purpose, being deficiency for the fiscal year 1873, $350,000.

Mr. KASSON. I should like to have the gentleman from Ohio explain to us why so large a deficiency comes over from 1873 as $350,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The accounts come in slowly, and it is impossible to tell until they have passed through the hands of the accounting officers of the Treasury how much really the amount will be. This appropriation is explained by the following letters of the Attorney-General and the Comptroller of the Currency:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, WASHINGTON, April 15, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor herewith to transmit copy of a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, asking me to apply for additional appropriations for deficiencies for the years ending June 30, 1872, and June 30, 1873.

The Comptroller states that an appropriation of $350,000 is necessary for the year ending June 30, 1873, in place of the estimate of $310,000 for that year, heretofore submitted, on account of the presentation of claims arising during that year not heretofore known to him. He also states that an appropriation of $20,000 is necessary for the year ending June 30, 1872, in place of $10,000, heretofore submitted, on account of similar claims presented for that year.

I have, therefore, in compliance with the request of the Comptroller, to ask that the appropriations be made in accordance with the statements in the inclosed letter.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 13, 1874.

SIR: By letter from this office dated November 18, 1873, you were informed that to supply deficiencies in appropriations for expenses of courts of the United States there would be needed $310,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, and $10,000 for the immediately preceding fiscal year. In making the estimate it was assumed that no more accounts would be rendered for 1872, and that for such as pertained to 1873 a sufficient margin had been allowed. But the presentation of claims against the United States, even when no question as to their payment is likely to be raised, is sometimes delayed for long periods of time.

Since the estimates were made, five months ago, many accounts have come in of which no previous notice had been given, and it is found that the sums above specified will prove insufficient.

There should be appropriated to supply deficiencies for expenses of courts $350,000 for the year ending June 30, 1873, and $20,000 for the year ending June 30, 1872, and I have the honor to request that you will please apply for these sums, in lieu of those heretofore requested. This increase of former estimates exceeds the amount of additional accounts received, but is not greater than may be needed to meet possible demands. If it prove more than sufficient for all just claims the surplus will of course be covered into the Treasury.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. TAYLER,
Comptroller.

Hon. GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the salary of the late judge of the eastern district of Wisconsin, retired under the fifth section of the act of April 10, 1869, from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1874, $1,750.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to add the following:

For payment of the telegraphic operator from April 1, 1874, to the end of the present current fiscal year, $417.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To supply a deficiency in the appropriation for clerks to committees of the House of Representatives during the present fiscal year, the sum of $2,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment. It is to pay the Official Reporters of debates of the House for the second year of this Congress. We have already made an appropriation paying them up to the 4th of March last. This is to pay them for the current year, beginning with the last 4th of March. I do not think there will be a single objection to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the five Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House, said reporters to be paid monthly, during the second year of the Forty-third Congress, $25,185.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I offer the following amendment, which has been agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations unanimously. Add to the amendment just adopted the following:

For compensation for clerical service rendered to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service from January 1, $600; and messenger to the Committee on War Claims, $250.

That has been agreed to by the committee unanimously.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will explain to the House that in order to prepare the voluminous reports and letters sent to the Committee on Appropriations to accompany the general appropriation bills reported to the House, we found it necessary to employ some outside help to do the copying. I move to insert at the end of line 736 the following:

Of which the sum of seventy-five dollars shall be paid to A. F. Childs for services to the Committee on Appropriations.

It does not increase the appropriation at all. We found the House would be better served by having the service rendered as it has been done.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Capitol grounds:

For improving Capitol grounds, and for sewers and street-lights for same, $20,000.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to insert the following:

Provided, So much of said sum as is necessary shall be expended by the Architect of the Capitol in forthwith removing from the Capitol grounds the engine building south of the Capitol.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. To be a deficiency, the work for which the appropriation is made must have been already done. I make the point of order that this is not germane to the bill. This is either a deficiency bill or it is a fraud. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] say that this is work for the present fiscal year?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The work ought to have been done during this fiscal year. There has been a law in existence these two years—for one at any rate—requiring the building to be removed, but nobody has had any funds to do it with; so that it becomes a deficiency.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very heavy appropriations have been made for the improvement of the Capitol grounds.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Undoubtedly. But these have all been expended, and that is the reason why there is no work now proceeding on the grounds.

Mr. HOLMAN. This, as I understand it, is to be expended in the future. It has not been expended already.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It is work which ought to be done during this fiscal year, ending June 30, 1874.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the paragraph. That it is not a deficiency is very apparent.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well. Before the question is taken on striking out let the amendment go with the paragraph.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is certainly useless to talk about limiting expenditures, if, whenever a Department finds it necessary to spend more money than we appropriate, we very good-naturedly appropriate the additional sum required in a deficiency bill. You have made handsome appropriations for the improvement of these Capitol grounds and the result has been one of the most barbarous things that ever disgraced a civilized people, the removal of the monuments around the Capitol. We have had, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] said yesterday, a shabby-genteel idea substituted for the graceful ornaments with which our ancestors surrounded the Capitol. You have made ample appropriations and they have been spent in demolishing these monuments. I believe that if it had been known when the appropriations were made that all this was to take place there was not a gentleman here with any regard for taste who would have tolerated the changes that have been made. There is no pretense that this is a deficiency, or that any emergency has sprung up requiring this money to be expended.

I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether it is to be the policy of this House that, without any excuse for it, without any extraordinary emergency having arisen during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made, you are to make this appropriation for additional expenditures in defiance of the limitations you have imposed. If this is done, Congress becomes the mere servant of your subordinates, instead of the people, through Congress, being masters of the Treasury.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk in explanation of this. I congratulate the committee on the value to them of the result of having printed all the statements on which we proceed.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARCHITECT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES CAPITOL,
Washington, D. C., March 18, 1874.

SIR: In the improvement of the Capitol grounds it is necessary to construct a sewer from New Jersey avenue and B street south, and one at Delaware avenue and B street north, to carry the water from these points. A new sewer must also be constructed from the Senate wing through the grounds, as the old sewer, built many years ago, on made ground, broke in two places last season, and is in constant danger of similar breakage.

I therefore respectfully suggest that an appropriation of $20,000 be asked for in the deficiency bill, to pay for the sewers named above, and for the gas-mains and lamp-posts put around the eastern park.

When the streets around this park were being paved, I had the lamp-posts and gas-main laid, in order to save expense and prevent the destruction of the roadway by having the same torn up when an appropriation should have been made for that work.

As the last appropriation was so worded that no money could be paid from it for any work east of the front of the Capitol, I thought I was justified in having the work in question done, to be paid for when an appropriation for that purpose was made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

EDWARD CLARK,
Architect.

Hon. JAMES H. PLATT,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will ask the Clerk to read the indorsement that was made on that letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Indorsement.]

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 26, 1874.

Respectfully referred to Hon. J. A. GARFIELD, chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are satisfied after examination that the appropriation asked for should be made.

JAMES H. PLATT, JR.,
Chairman.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has made a motion to strike out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not insist on the motion.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following paragraph:

Reform School:

To reimburse the fund of the Reform School in the District of Columbia for work done and materials furnished in the erection of the buildings for the same, $18,386.58; and the Attorney-General is hereby directed to take such measures as shall be most effectual to enforce any right or claim which the United States have to this amount of money now involved in the bankruptcy of Henry D. Cooke, or of Jay Cooke & Co., the same having been in the hands of said Henry D. Cooke, as treasurer of said Reform School, at the time of his bankruptcy, and being then moneys belonging to the United States.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] why the same provision as is made here for the protection of the interests of the United States because of the bankruptcy of Henry D. Cooke, or of Jay Cooke & Co., is not also made in connection with the paragraph relating to the Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home, on page 26 of the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was intended by the committee that that should be done. If the gentleman will draugh an amendment, making the same provision in regard to the Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home, I will accept it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I offer the following amendment.

After line 624 add the following:

And the Attorney-General is hereby directed to inquire into the necessity for, and to take any measure that may be most effectual to enforce any right or claim which the United States have to this money, or any part of the same, now involved in the bankruptcy of Henry D. Cooke, or of Jay Cooke & Co.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Understanding from various and, I believe, reliable sources that the fund appropriated for this Reform School in the District of Columbia by act of Congress of May 15, 1872, had been improperly withdrawn from the Treasury, and that there had been corruption in the disbursement of that fund, in order that we might find out who had squandered it and how it had been squandered, some weeks ago I introduced a resolution in this House, instructing the Committee on Public Expenditures in the Interior Department to investigate this matter and find out who had been guilty in the disbursement of this money, to find out where the money had gone, into whose hands it fell, and by what authority it went into the hands of a private banking house, whose suspension a short time afterward startled the country and produced a money panic such as was never before known in the country. We know that the public are suspicious of officials, and the reason is that men who have committed frauds on the public Treasury are not prosecuted and punished. I think, therefore, it would be well for this House to show the country that they intend to look into these frauds, and publish to the honest men of the country the names of those who perpetrate them on the public Treasury, as well as the officials who have permitted it. Some official was to blame when a private banking house was preferred to the Treasury of the United States as a depository. This money was withdrawn from the Treasury by H. D. Cooke, on a requisition of the Secretary of the Interior. What authority had the Secretary of the Interior for turning this money over to H. D. Cooke when he knew that he had only given a bond in the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of guarding the disbursement and paying out this large fund?

Now, I understand the facts in this case to be these: Henry D. Cooke drew from the Treasury of the United States from the 1st to the 3d day of August this large sum of money before this building for the Reform School had even been commenced. The Secretary of the Interior therefore must have known that he did not need the money for the purposes of this building. He knew that the building had not been commenced, and that therefore there was no necessity for the expenditure of a dollar. The Secretary of the Interior was, by the law making the appropriation for this purpose, the person chosen to select the site and pay for it, which he did on the 3d day of August, 1872. It is a remarkable fact in this connection that H. D. Cooke on the 1st day of August, 1872, drew from the Treasury, on the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior, $20,000 of this fund, and on the 3d day of August, $50,000, the same day that the Secretary of the Interior drew $30,000 to pay for the site; he was permitted to draw this money before there was any contract made for the building, and immediately after the Secretary had purchased the site. By reading the law you will see that the Secretary of the Interior was the most prominent official in this transaction. He was to guard the paying out of this liberal and charitable donation by Congress. He was the man to whom Congress looked to guard the fund, and see that it was taken out properly and was not lost. I will read the act. It is as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to purchase a new site for said school, to be selected by himself and the board of trustees, on which buildings for the accommodation of three hundred boys shall be erected, under the supervision of the said Secretary, the board of trustees, and the architect of the Capitol; and for these purposes the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That before any part of this appropriation shall be drawn, plans and specifications of the building to be erected shall be made by the architect of the Capitol, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and the amount expended for the purchase of said site and the erection of said building shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

How has the Secretary of the Interior discharged that trust?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know whether gentlemen desire to continue the debate on this clause. I was anxious to move to lay this bill aside, but if any further explanation is desired I shall be glad to make it, and will answer any questions that may be put to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask some questions.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I will make a brief statement.

Mr. KASSON. Before the gentleman proceeds I desire to ask him whether in his judgment there is not some provision of law necessary to prevent the drawing from the Treasury of money appropriated until the work shall have actually been done or the service rendered. For example, we appropriated a certain amount for certain purposes in regard to this Reform School. That money was drawn in a lump and left lying in the hands of the treasurer hardly forty steps from the vaults of the United States Treasury. We have found before—I cannot now turn to the law, but it was passed during my former service here—that it was necessary to provide a clause which should keep in the vaults of the Treasury the money appropriated until it became positively due. My question is whether, in the opinion of the chairman of the committee, it is not expedient to provide in this bill a similar provision of law to keep the money in the Treasury until somebody has become entitled to it?

Mr. GARFIELD. The suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa is a very proper one, and the Committee on Appropriations will be glad if the Judiciary Committee or some other committee will prepare for some one of the annual appropriation bills—not the deficiency bill, which relates to the past, but some of the annual bills which provide for future expenditures on works of this sort—a measure like that which the gentleman suggests.

Now, by the law organizing the Reform School a board of trustees was created, and they were authorized to appoint one of their own number as treasurer. The law created that board before the new building was provided for, and in the early days of the organization it provided that the treasurer should give a bond to the amount of $5,000 only.

The law ought to have been changed when the new school building was put up, so as to increase the bond; but that was not done, and therefore the bond in this case covers but $5,000.

Furthermore, the law provided that the treasurer thus chosen from their own number by the board of trustees should be responsible for the use of the money; he was authorized to be the custodian of the money. But it being a Government institution he is an officer of the United States, and therefore according to the law the moneys as drawn were drawn properly; that is, they were drawn legally. I do not think that hereafter moneys ought to be drawn in that way in any of these institutions. It would perhaps be difficult and troublesome if every small account to be paid had to be sent to the regular accounting officers of the Treasury before it was paid. For instance, a boy runs away from the Reform School, and some person is sent to Baltimore to catch him and bring him back; and the expense of that trip may be five dollars. Now, when he comes back that account cannot be paid until it is filed—for services, five dollars—and the account sent to the Treasury and passed by the regular accounting officers and adjusted, after a week or ten days or perhaps two weeks. That would be a very uncomfortable and uncertain way of doing business.

For that reason it has been the custom to draw the money out in lump. Mr. Cooke, the treasurer, drew out the money at the time they were putting up this building. On the 1st day of July last he had in his hands about $80,000 of this money. Between the 1st of July and the date of the failure of Jay Cooke & Co. he did not draw a dollar from the Treasury. The committee examined that matter in order to see whether there was any appearance of his having made a draft on the Treasury just previous to the time of his failure; for the suggestion arose that there was possibly a drawing out of funds preparatory to the breakdown. But so far as the committee were able to find, the evidence was all the other way; not a dollar was drawn by him after the 1st of July; and from the 1st of July to the date of the failure he paid out over $50,000 for the various expenditures of the school. In fact the regular expense fund, including salaries and other expenses, the building fund, and the other funds, were treated on his book as separate funds. But in his drafts upon the Treasury there was no distinction made; he drew the whole amount in the lump, and paid it out indifferently to one fund or another as the drafts were presented to him. The result was that one of these accounts he overpaid very considerably; and of course in doing so it left one of his other funds short.

In the book before us we have a certificate showing the exact state of the fund at the date of the failure. This fund amounted to $18,386.58 at the time of the failure. Of course as Mr. Cooke kept his accounts in the bank of Jay Cooke & Co., when it closed all the assets were put together. We believe the United States are preferred creditors, or rather we believe the Government has the right to assert that it was our money that was held there by a Government officer; that Henry D. Cooke was, in his capacity of treasurer, being the trustee of a Government institution, to that extent a United States officer. Therefore we believe the United States has the right to take out of the assets this $18,000 before a distribution is made to the creditors. That is the reason why we here provide that the Attorney-General shall proceed to collect out of the assets that amount as a fund of the United States.

But in the mean time the man who erected the building under contract according to law is a poor man, out of his money, and is paying a large amount for interest; for he has tried to pay his own hands and for his own material out of his own means, and is in great and suffering need for his payment. The committee heard him as well as the trustees of the institution. They are satisfied on the ground of equity and law that we are bound to make this amount good. And the committee accompany it with a provision that the Government shall retake its own whenever it can be done.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BECK. I renew it. I am not familiar with this matter, but it seems to me there has been an embezzlement, and that we are required to make an appropriation here to make it good without an investigation into the causes of it. Whatever may have been the organization of the Reform School, whatever may have been the rights of the treasurer of that Reform School under that organization, the act of May 15, 1872, makes the Secretary of the Interior the custodian of this money. Section 7 of that act reads as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to purchase a new site for said school, to be selected by himself and the board of trustees, on which buildings for the accommodation of three hundred boys shall be erected, under the supervision of the said Secretary, the board of trustees, and the architect of the Capitol; and for these purposes the sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That before any part of this appropriation shall be drawn, plans and specifications of the building to be erected shall be made by the architect of the Capitol, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and the amount expended for the purchase of said site and the erection of said building shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

One hundred thousand dollars was put into the care of the Secretary of the Interior; and as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said a few moments ago, it was drawn out of the Treasury on his requisition. Neither Henry D. Cooke nor anybody else besides the Secretary of the Interior could take that money out of the Treasury, whether as treasurer of the Reform School or in any other capacity. The Secretary of the Interior had to issue his requisition before that money could be drawn. What did he do with the money? Did he apply it to the purpose specified by the law? No; he put into the hands of Henry D. Cooke and into the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co. $70,000 of that money. What does the law provide on this subject? The act of 1846 declares that—

If any disbursing officer of the United States shall deposit any public money intrusted to him in any place or in any manner except as authorized by law, or shall convert to his own use in any way whatever, or shall loan with or without interest, or, for any purpose not prescribed by law, shall withdraw from the treasurer or any assistant treasurer, or any authorized depositary, or for any purpose not prescribed by law shall transfer or apply any portion of public money intrusted to him, every such act shall be deemed and adjudged an embezzlement of the money so deposited, converted, loaned, withdrawn, transferred, or applied; and every such act is hereby declared a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment with hard labor for a term not less than one year nor more than ten years, or by a fine of not more than the amount embezzled nor less than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

This money was withdrawn from the Treasury on the requisition of the Secretary of the Interior; it was placed in the hands of private bankers; it was given to a man who had no authority by law to receive it. It is gone, that is admitted. Now, I want to know whether the provision of law to which I have referred has not been violated, and if so, why the matter has not been looked into? I am told here on the floor that the surety on the bond, the governor of this District, has not even been sued for this money. Is not that the fact?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the paragraph by adding the following:

And to inquire into the embezzlement of the public moneys and ascertain who is responsible therefor, and institute such prosecution as public justice may require, and that he report his proceedings therein to Congress in his next annual report.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make a point of order on that amendment. To provide for an investigation as the amendment proposes is new legislation. I object to the amendment particularly on account of the use of the word "embezzlement," which I think a very offensive term.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the offense in question embezzlement?

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; it is not so according to any dictionary or legal sense of the word; and I am sorry that the gentleman from Indiana uses that word in such a connection.

Mr. BECK. I have read the law. What is the offense under that law if it is not embezzlement?

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the point of order I wish to say that the amendment is clearly germane to the paragraph. I do not contend that the paragraph itself is germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to overrule the point of order, on the ground that the amendment seems to be germane to the paragraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose then the point should have been made against the paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it might have been; but surely not against a germane amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I presume the Chair is correct in his ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would be very reluctant to use any term implying a criminal offense unless it could properly be used in this connection. I would not unnecessarily asperse the reputation of any person connected with public affairs, whether holding a public office or a private position, by employing an improper term in reference to his acts. But I seriously differ with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] when he states that this is not a case of embezzlement. I believe it would be embezzlement under the statute of his own State or of my State, neither of which is more specific or definite than the law of the United States applicable to this subject.

The gentleman is aware that this money is lost to the Treasury. I do not pretend to say who is responsible for the loss; but the statute against embezzlement was intended to protect the public funds from being appropriated to any private use. These funds were appropriated to private use; will the gentleman deny that? And is it not embezzlement to appropriate to private use public funds, which for many reasons ought to be regarded as sacred? Is not that embezzlement in law and according to all criminal codes?

From the history of this transaction, or from what has come to the knowledge of the House, I do not undertake to say who is responsible for the loss of this money; but clearly it has been withdrawn from the Treasury and applied to a different purpose from that for which it was appropriated, it has been applied to a private use; and when money is thus lost to the people is it not embezzlement? If not, what is it?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to consider whether it is by any means certain that there has been anything like an embezzlement. Let me put the case to the gentleman. On the bankruptcy of Jay Cooke & Co., involving Henry D. Cooke, who was the treasurer of the institution, all his funds were seized; and it was claimed by the assignee that he was entitled to take possession of this balance in the hands of the treasurer of the Reform School as well as all other funds. I have my doubts about that; and because there is doubt upon that question the provision has been inserted here that the Attorney-General shall take procedings to recover this money. I think the United States can follow this fund and recover it. If so, it will be received from the estate, and there is clearly no embezzlement.

Mr. HOLMAN. Suppose a banker and a township trustee or a county trustee, holding any official trust, any trust in connection with the discharge of official duties, should deposit the money of that trust with his general funds and use it the same as his general funds, would the gentleman from Maine say there was no embezzlement in that case?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. But suppose when he fails he has a balance on hand more than the amount of the public funds, and his assignees claim it?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me put to my friend from Maine this question: If the fund is withdrawn by the party authorized to withdraw it, if the trust funds are withdrawn by the trustee; if, as in this case, these funds are withdrawn from the Treasury upon a certain condition, and when the funds are withdrawn the trustee shall not apply them to the purposes for which they have been withdrawn from the United States Treasury, and shall put them into his general funds and use them as a part of his general funds, does the gentleman from Maine mean to say that is not embezzlement? In my judgment it is embezzlement upon two grounds. In the first place, he ought not to have withdrawn it from the Treasury and from the safeguards of the Treasury. It was embezzlement under the law in withdrawing it from the Treasury itself, where it was safe. Secondly, it was embezzlement on his part in mingling it with his own funds and subjecting it to the perils of his own funds.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That was entirely wrong. That was not the highest kind of care, to mingle trust funds with his general funds. But I fancy most men exercising public trust and drawing money from that source do not put it in a separate and distinct place. Very few men do that. I wish they did. I wish it had been done here. It does not, however, involve a question of embezzlement, provided at the time of his failure he had funds on hand, and, so far as he was concerned, was willing to turn them into the hands of the Government, but his assignees claimed them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that embezzlement, under the act of Congress?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think not.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Let me say to the gentleman from Maine, I understand the gentleman who put up this building for this Reform School went to Governor Cooke repeatedly for his money, but could not get it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it suits the gentleman I am willing to use any other word than "embezzlement." I am willing to substitute the word "loss" for "embezzlement."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is much better.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say here distinctly, as a Representative of the people, I am not going to discriminate against men in humble employment and in favor of those in high employment as to the manner in which they conduct their business and discharge their duties. The higher the employment the more imperative it is we should have purity, integrity, and good faith in the discharge of the public trusts. Whenever the American people are willing to tolerate frauds on the part of those high in position and only punish the humble citizen for a corresponding offense, then we have lost all our manhood as a people.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a word in regard to the amendment. In the remarks I first made, as well as in the remarks made by the gentleman from Maine, we pointed out what we regard as a loose method in any one of these offices of mingling two funds and of drawing the whole money in a lump. It ought, as far as possible, to be the rule in all the disbursements of the Government whenever a separate purpose is designated in an appropriation bill there ought to be a separate account kept and a separate fund constantly in mind in reference to each of the separate purposes. In most of these institutions to which we have paid money that has not been done, perhaps.

When they began to build this institution they found this trouble: On Saturday they desired to pay off their workmen, the common laboring men, working during the week on the building; and they gave them an order on the Treasury of the United States, or on the Secretary of the Interior, for the money, to go there with the order late on Saturday, perhaps to find the Department closed, or to go there early enough to find it open, and they had to go through all the circumlocution office of the accounting division of the Treasury before they could get payment for the week's work. It was an oppression and hardship. In many instances men who could not sign their names and who had to make their marks were exposed weekly to go through the Treasury Department in order to obtain their week's wages. It was therefore agreed on all hands, for the carrying on expeditiously of the work on the building, the money had better be drawn in a lump so as to be paid here at the bank under the direction of the treasurer. They were not without warrant of law for that. In the section read by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and I believe he did not read the whole of it, where the money was appropriated for the erection of the building, there is to be found a provision that it was to be erected under the supervision of the said Secretary, that is, the Secretary of the Interior, a board of trustees, and the architect of the Capitol. The board of trustees were brought in as one of the legal powers to have the control and management and protection of any expenditure of this $100,000 appropriated in the act of May 11, 1872. That board of trustees voted and ordered the treasurer to make a draft on the Secretary of the Interior for the whole sum in a lump to the amount of $85,000, and he drew it as the treasurer under the orders of the board of trustees. He honored the drafts for money from week to week, and paid out from the day that amount was drawn and paid into his hands up to the day of his failure $50,000, paying and honoring all the drafts that came to him. He did not go and deposit it where it would be lost, but kept it in his own safe in the office where he transacted his business. That office happened to be the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co., and when the banking house of Jay Cooke & Co. failed, the safe in which this and other moneys was kept was taken charge of, of course, by the officers who took charge of this bank.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he intends to state to the committee that the Reform-School building was erected by the trustees themselves and not by contractors? Does he intend to state that the payment of laborers engaged in the work on that building was made directly to them in any instance?

Mr. GARFIELD. I mean to say that in part it was. In the main there was a contract for the building. But while the building was being put up there were fences to be erected, drains to be constructed, walks to be made, various improvements to be made on the farm as well, and there were also the ordinary expenses of the boys who were there. Every week brought its bills. And according to the terms of the contract the trustees made payments from week to week to the contractor so as to enable him to pay his men, and so as to keep the pay abreast with the work. In this way there were payments to the contractor, and at the same time there were some payments to individual workmen about the farm. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] looks incredulous, but these are the facts of the case.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to ask the gentleman whether this officer, as the treasurer of the Reform School, gave bonds for the moneys which might be in his hands?

Mr. GARFIELD. He gave bonds to the amount of $5,000. That was under the old law, before the building was ordered to be erected.

Mr. MAYNARD. I see great force in the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio that the treasurer should have moneys in his hands to meet certain emergencies; and that being a banker he might keep them in his bank. But I would ask the gentleman whether he does not think that the law should be changed so as to require an increased and more efficient bond—a bond for an amount commensurate with the sum of money the treasurer is likely to have in his hands?

Mr. GARFIELD. I have suggested that that should be done hereafter. But that was not put in the law.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. When the firm of Jay Cooke & Co. suspended the money in the bank was partly that of their general business and partly the special Government funds in their hands. Now, if Mr. Cooke had suspended before being thrown into bankruptcy, and refused to give up any of that public money, what would have been the result?

Mr. GARFIELD. The property went over of course immediately into the hands of the receiver. It was not in his own custody a day after the failure.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I understand that it was for some time.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at all; but we undertake to provide here that we shall insist that this is our money, and that effectual measures shall be taken to enforce the rights of the United States.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I understand that after the suspension the contractor applied for his money to the treasurer, and he retained it that it might go in with the general settlement.

Mr. MAYNARD. Let me make this further suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio, whether this fund shall not be considered in law, as held by this officer as a special and separate fund in his own possession, to be applied as such, and whether the court of bankruptcy if appealed to would not so adjudge?

Mr. GARFIELD. We direct the Attorney-General to demand this as money of the Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. If this was a specific fund that he should have withdrawn and appropriated for this particular purpose, his going into bankruptcy did not change its character.

Mr. GARFIELD. For the reasons I have stated it seems to me cruel, unjust, and in the highest degree unworthy of us to trample upon a man who has fallen in his fortunes by fastening on him the word embezzlement, or to demand an investigation as though some fraud had been committed. The Committee on Appropriations called Governor Cooke before them and called the board of trustees before them. The books of the treasurer were brought. The trustees themselves made a full exhibit. Mr. Cooke himself was examined and cross-examined in regard to his whole transactions in this trust from beginning to end. The committee made inquiries in regard to every particular, and I can speak for every member of that committee, without regard to party distinction, when I say that they were satisfied that what had been done had been done in a plain, straightforward, business manner, in accordance with the invariable custom of that institution from first to last, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the consent and approval of the accounting officers of the Treasury.

The mistake has been simply in the method of doing business, in uniting funds that ought not to have been united. That ought to be corrected in the future; but as regards the past, we claim that it is the plain duty of Congress to appropriate this money, and that we should take no part in the attempt to fling insinuations upon an unfortunate man who was greatly trusted, and fell in consequence of the great financial calamity which overspread the country.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to make a suggestion. The question as I understand it is not whether Mr. Cooke failed or not, but whether a public officer, the Secretary of the Interior, drew the money contrary to the provisions of the law and deposited it in a private banking association. That is the question.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Secretary of the Interior did not deposit it in any private banking institution at all. He drew the money and delivered it over to the treasurer of the Reform School, who is a bonded officer authorized by law to receive the money and disburse it in accordance with the orders of the board of trustees. The Secretary of the Interior performed his duty merely when he drew a warrant on the Treasury payable to the order of the treasurer of the board of trustees. The deposit was made by the treasurer for his own convenience and in his own name.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The treasurer of the Reform School?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But the Secretary of the Interior permitted him to draw in a gross sum the whole amount of money, when the work had not been done and there had not yet taken place the conditions on which the money should be paid.

Mr. GARFIELD. A contract had been made for the building and money was being paid out day by day and week by week. They commenced at first by presenting each individual draft or voucher to the Secretary of the Interior. It was found to be almost impossible to transact the business in that way, and after examining the law under which the appropriation was made, the Secretary of the Interior believed that he had the right to turn the money over to the treasurer of the Reform School.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Here was a work going on in the District of Columbia, where it was easy, as the work was done, to draw from time to time the amount of money needed to pay for it; but instead of that the money was drawn in a gross sum by an officer without any bond to cover it, and it was lost by the action of the officer to whose care it was intrusted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Perhaps my colleague ought to say that it was lost because Congress failed to provide for a bond sufficiently large to cover the sum appropriated. The old bond of $5,000 was large enough to cover the sums that would ordinarily go into the hands of the treasurer of the Reform School; but when Congress appropriated $100,000 for that institution it neglected to provide for an increase in the amount of the bond.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I suppose Congress understood that the law which the gentleman from Kentucky has read, prohibiting an officer from drawing money for any purpose not provided for, was a sufficient guarantee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think that that law applies to this case. This case stands under a special statute in which the money was appropriated. I do not regard the general law to which the gentleman from Kentucky referred as applicable to it at all.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Allow me one further suggestion. This statute that the gentleman from Ohio refers to I understand empowers the Secretary of the Interior and the board of trustees simply to take charge of the erection and construction of this building. It does not empower them to draw the money before they have built it. They are to superintend the construction of the building. But it was not intended, as I understand the statute, to affect in any way the right or the duty of the Secretary of the Interior as to the manner of drawing the money from the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will modify my amendment by substituting the word "loss" for "embezzlement;" so that it will read as follows:

And to inquire into this loss of the public moneys and ascertain who is responsible therefor, and institute such prosecution as public justice may require, and that he report his proceedings therein to Congress in his next annual report.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. —. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of the appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for future payments of money in excess of such appropriations; and any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and be punished in the manner provided for the violation of section 3 of the act approved July 25, 1868, and entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is not that amendment liable to the point of order?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. On the 6th day of April last the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, offered the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read; and it was adopted by the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, Pending the bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriation for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it shall be in order to offer for consideration an amendment providing that any violation of the provisions of section 7 of the act of July 12, 1870, by any officer of the Government, shall be deemed a misdemeanor and punishable in the manner provided for in section 3 of the act of July 25, 1868.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This amendment is the law as it now stands. A general statute provides that it shall be unlawful for any officer of the Government to make any contract or involve the Government in any expenditure of money beyond the appropriations for the fiscal year. The right which the gentleman from New York got by his motion was to add to that the penal part of another statute, which I ask the Clerk to read. It is section 3 of the law of July 5, 1868.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter no contract shall be entered into for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement whatever which shall bind the Government to pay a larger sum of money than the amount in the Treasury appropriated for the specific purpose. And if any officer of the Government shall knowingly contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement which shall bind the Government to pay a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated for such purpose, such officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than two years, and shall pay a fine of $2,000.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Now, the object of the amendment I have offered is simply to add the same penalty which is already in the statute against any contract for any public work in excess of the appropriation to the other provision of law which now stands against making any expenditure or authorizing any expenditure beyond the amount of the existing appropriation. Both of those provisions of law were put upon deficiency bills, and of course for the very purpose of preventing as far as possible the necessity of subsequent deficiency appropriation bills. It occurred to me when the gentleman from New York offered his amendment that if the law was to stand it was very proper that some penalty should attach to it; and the penalty here proposed is the same penalty which is attached to another provision of the statute against unauthorized expenditures of money.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will not oppose this amendment, but I must say I am afraid it will work badly in some portions of the financial machinery. But I am willing to let it go, and we will look at it afterward.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must overrule the point of order, because the amendment was made in order by a suspension of the rules.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this bill be now laid aside, to be reported, with the amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the committee now proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object until after the general debate has been concluded, or until after the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] has addressed the committee.

Mr. SWANN. I recommend that one hour be allowed for general debate. There are a number of gentlemen from the Committee on Foreign Affairs who desire to be heard upon a portion of this bill which has engaged the attention of that committee. I suggest, therefore, one hour for general debate, after which the discussion can proceed under the five-minute rule.

I am glad to say that the provisions of this bill do not differ materially, if at all, from the bill reported by me last year from the Committee on Appropriations. Its provisions in fact are substantially the same, with a few immaterial exceptions which I will proceed briefly to point out. There is no change in any of the officers which are enumerated in this bill, with the single exception of the consulate at Vienna. Last year this House raised the salary of that consulate to $5,000 a year, in view of the approaching international exhibition. By the action of the Committee on Appropriations that salary has been put back to $3,000 a year instead of $5,000 where it then stood.

The only point of variance of any importance will be found in the item for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper. In that item there is an increase of $31,000, which has been brought about by the action of the House at its last session increasing the amount to be paid for rent 20 per cent. With that single exception the bill proper will be found to be identical with the bill reported by me last year.

The Committee of the Whole will find that this bill makes provision for three commissions—the Spanish commission, the Mexican commission, and the British commission under the treaty of Washington. In relation to the Spanish commission, the arbitrators have been proceeding with great industry and vigor; a large amount of claims have been reported upon and considered, and up to this time there is a favorable report from the State Department, showing that thus far the United States have not had imposed upon them any extraordinary burden from this source. And the expectation is that, going on in the way they have heretofore done, the commission will wind up its labors with advantage to the Government when the final award shall have been arrived at.

In regard to the Mexican commission—suspended for a short time owing to political complications which intervened, but the commissioners are again actively engaged—the result so far has been largely in favor of this Government. On account of grave differences of opinion which arose in that commission, it became necessary to refer to arbitration some of the disputed questions touching a large class of these claims. I am happy to state that the gain to the United States has been very large.

The person named as arbitrator by the State Department to adjudicate and determine the points in controversy between the two governments was Sir Edward Thornton, the British minister accredited to this Government, and so far he has adjudicated claims amounting to upward of thirty millions, which have thus far been saved to the United States by this commission and the distinguished arbitrator appointed by the Department under it. In regard to the British claims commission which has been at work since the ratification of the treaty, the same satisfactory results have been arrived at in disposing of a large number of claims referred to it, amounting in the aggregate to some $90,000,000 and upward. It has thus far adjudicated some $1,929,819, which is provided for in this bill. These are the commissions which have been sitting here in the city of Washington, and it will be seen that the claims adjudicated have amounted to a large sum, and have relieved this Government of a very heavy weight of responsibility in the settlement of claims which have been many of them of long standing, but which are now decided in favor of this Government.

These are points to which I thought it my duty to call the attention of this House, because it showed the vigilance with which this whole subject has been conducted by the State Department, and which has thrown a very large amount into the Treasury which had been held in abeyance heretofore, but is now finally disposed of.

I will state, Mr. Chairman, there is another point of very great importance which will engage the attention of this committee, and that is the part of this bill which has been in charge of my honorable friend who sits near me, [Mr. ORTH,] chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that is the reorganization of the consular and diplomatic system.

This House is aware that the subject has frequently come up here in the course of discussion in reference to the position of those who occupy places under the consular system. A great deal of confusion has sprung from it, and it has been necessary and even urgent for some time past that the whole subject should be taken up and acted upon. Efforts have been made heretofore to change the location of some of these officers, but up to this time no progress has been made in any approved system of reorganization toward the final settlement of this important part of the bill. Some of these officers, sir, have been placed almost in juxtaposition by the changes which have taken place in the governments abroad. Some of these officers have been rendered useless. The pay of some has been too large and others too small. So a reorganization, in order to enable the State Department to operate with that freedom and that system necessary to the successful operations of that Department, has become imperative. These offices have been so mixed and got into such a position as to make it absolutely necessary that a reform should be made and that speedily.

I am happy, sir, to say this subject has been referred to the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and so far as I have been enabled to judge of the result of his labors and those who co-operated with him, I am prepared to state to the House it has been managed with great caution, prudence, and ability. It has received, too, the cordial sanction of the State Department. Although I shall find it necessary to offer an amendment to the amendment submitted by the chairman on Foreign Affairs, which will be under discussion in considering this bill, and which I propose to accept as an amendment to the consular and diplomatic bill, I am happy to say, sir, on free conference with the Department of State and examination into this question and the needs of the public service, there has been entire accord between the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the State Department on this subject. Further, sir, I am happy to be able to state the amendment I propose to offer to this bill, or rather to the amendment to be presented by the gentleman who sits near me, accords entirely with the view taken by the examination I have been able to give this bill, and when presented to the House will come here not only with the sanction of the committee which I have the honor in part to represent, but that of the honorable gentleman who stands here as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It comes with the entire sanction and accord of both of these committees representing the public service in these Departments.

It is proper for me to state, Mr. Chairman, that this subject of the organization of the consular system has impressed itself upon me for years past as a thing proper to be done, a thing necessary to be done, a thing which has become almost imperative; and my judgment is, from a fair and impartial examination of this whole subject, it will be found to inure not only to the benefit of this Government but may be attended with the advantage of saving the public money hereafter. I think it will be a move in the right direction of economy, and I am prepared to give my friend here my cordial indorsement in support of the bill which will be presented by him, and which I will accept with the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations as a part of the bill I have reported to the House.

There is another item, Mr. Chairman, to which I would briefly allude, for I do not propose to detain the House by extended remarks upon this subject. It has reference to the claim which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and which has been carefully examined by that committee, and which has been referred by it to a sub-committee. It will appear as a part of this bill reported to this House, and at the proper time I shall call upon the gentleman who has charge of that subject on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to explain it, as the subject was new to the Committee on Appropriations, and has been thoroughly examined by that gentleman, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.]

I will say, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the adjustment of all these important questions relating to the foreign relations of the Government, to the constant intercourse which is daily going on between the State Department and all its agents, both diplomatic and consular, that the action of the State Department seems to have been in the right direction. They have been at all times willing to lean on the side of economy in all the offices which belong to that particular Department and are under its supervision. I have found there every disposition to economize. Their labors are in the direction of economy, and I think that the amendment when it is presented in connection with this bill by the gentleman from Indiana who sits on my left [Mr. ORTH] will be found by this House to be a measure suggested in the interest of economy, while at the same time facilitating the public service and inuring greatly to the benefit of this Government.

There is another matter to which I beg leave briefly to refer. It is in reference to the northern boundary, in connection with which there is asked here an additional appropriation of $150,000. In order, sir, to put the committee in possession of full information in regard to this important matter, as a good deal has been said about the large increase of expense which it will be likely to entail upon this Government, I am happy to state here that so far as I have been able to give this subject my attention no material addition to this appropriation is likely to be required. This boundary survey has been going on most prosperously, although under great disadvantages, and when completed I am satisfied it will inure greatly to the benefit of this Government. Already, sir, by the decisions which have been arrived at this Government comes into possession of a strip of territory, running from the Lake of the Woods to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, one mile in breadth, forming the most magnificent boundary that this Government could have upon its northern borders. Up to this time the acquisitions which have been made under the surveys which have been going on, and which have been faithfully prosecuted, will amount to one mile wide of territory, extending along that northern boundary from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, including a tract of territory which covers perhaps some five or six hundred thousand acres of land. Looking at it from a material point of view, it might be estimated in fact to be worth to the United States nearly $1,000,000, to say nothing of the convenience of the boundary which it establishes there, removing any foreign government a mile from the territory claimed by the United States, while if the survey had been left in an unfinished condition this country might have been involved on account of that boundary in a war at any time.

There are strategic points along the line of this boundary which may inure to the benefit of Great Britain, or any other foreign nation that may be disposed to run railroads or to intrude upon our territory. And in that view, if this line comes to be established, I think there will be a large gain to this Government; and I look upon that acquisition, as far as obtained by the survey made up to this time, as worth substantially and materially more than $1,000,000 to the United States. I think that has been accomplished by the survey so far as it has proceeded.

Now, sir, I desire to have some documents read, in order to put the committee in possession of the facts in regard to this northern boundary. And I may say here that this boundary has been confounded with another boundary which has been appropriated for by Congress and which has been completed. This is the northern boundary, and not the northwestern boundary as is sometimes stated. The two have been confounded, causing error in the calculations in regard to the expense which has been incurred in running this line. I ask the clerk to read the letter I send to the desk from the Secretary of State in regard to this boundary line, and what has been done under it.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, April 23, 1874.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of yesterday, I have the honor to inclose—

1. A memorandum respecting the northern boundary of the United States, which will explain for what boundary line the appropriation is asked, and the reason for asking it.

2. The original estimate of General Humphreys for the work, estimating the expense of completing the work at $375,000.

3. A report from the commission showing what remains to be done, and that the field-work will probably be completed this year. The appropriations expended to this time have amounted to $175,000. The amount now asked for is $150,000. The field-work, therefore, will probably be completed within the original estimate.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. THOMAS SWANN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SWANN. I desire also to incorporate in my remarks the following very interesting history of this boundary line, for the information of the committee, made up from official sources:

[Inclosure 1.]

1. The forty-ninth parallel is supposed to have been agreed upon as the boundary between French and British possessions under the treaty of Utrecht, but there being no settlements in the country the line was not actually run on the surface of the land at that time.

2. The possessions of the United States, under the treaty of 1783, extended only as far west as the northwest corner of the Lake of the Woods. (Treaties of the United States, pages 309, 310.)

3. In 1803 the United States acquired Louisiana of France. This acquisition extended their northern boundary westward from the Lake of the Woods to the western limit of French Louisiana. (Treaties of the United States, page 275.)

4. In 1818 a treaty was made with Great Britain by which it was provided that the boundary between the two possessions should start from the northwest corner of the Lake of the Woods, run thence north or south (as the case might be) to the forty-ninth parallel, and thence by the forty-ninth parallel west to the summit of the Rocky (called in the treaty Stony) Mountains. (Treaties of the United States, page 351.)

[This is the portion of the boundary to which the appropriation in question relates.]

5. In 1819 the United States acquired the title to Columbia. Under this title and the French title to Louisiana, and the discoveries and occupations of Columbia by citizens of the United States, we claimed the Pacific coast from California to the Russian possessions, i. e., to 54° 40′, which had been established by treaty as the Russian southern boundary. Great Britain laid claim to the whole or part of this territory.

6. In 1818 a joint occupation of the disputed territory west of the Rocky Mountains had been agreed upon for ten years. This was extended in 1827, and was continued until 1846. (Treaties of the United States, pages 351 and 364.)

7. In 1846, by treaty, it was agreed that the disputed boundary should be run upon the forty-ninth parallel, from the summit of the Rocky Mountains, where the former agreed line terminated, to the middle of the channel separating the continent from Vancouver's Island, thence down the center of the channel to the Strait of Fuca, and thence by the Strait of Fuca to the ocean. (Treaties of the United States, page 375.)

8. In 1856 a joint commission was created for the purpose of marking the part of the boundary settled by the treaty of 1846 on the surface of the earth. (Section 11 United States Statutes at Large, page 42, for appropriations.) The work was completed so far as related to the land boundary settled by that treaty.

[The appropriations for doing this work run through a series of years.]

9. Not being able to agree upon so much of the boundary settled by the treaty of 1846 as was under or through water, the question was referred to the Emperor of Germany by the treaty of Washington, and it has been decided in favor of the United States. (Treaties of the United States, pages 426 and 427.)

10. But in 1870 it was supposed, from some observation made by an officer in the Army of the United States, that there was a misapprehension about the true position of the forty-ninth parallel at Pembina, on the Red River, a part of the line settled by the treaty of 1818. Settlements had begun to appear upon the Red River. A post was standing there which had been erected several years previously after observations made with somewhat imperfect instruments, by an officer of the United States Army, which post had been assumed by the officials of both governments to be the true boundary. New observations showed this to be incorrect. The War Department had buildings and a reservation at Pembina, on the frontier. There was a post of the Hudson Bay Company near it, within what was supposed to be British territory, occupied by British troops. Settlers were taking up lands on both sides of the line, and it became important to have the actual line of boundary defined and marked on the surface of the earth. It was therefore agreed informally that whenever the legislative departments of the two governments would sanction it by appropriations, a careful survey should be made, and the line between the Lake of the Woods and the summit of the Rocky Mountains should be marked out, as the line between the summit of the Rocky Mountains and the Georgian Gulf had already been marked out. (Foreign Relations, 1870, page 399.)

11. Estimates were therefore called for from the War Department, which were submitted to Congress with the message of the President. (Foreign Relations, 1870, page 406,) and the President recommended an appropriation for such a commission. (Foreign Relations, 1870, page 9.)

12. On the 19th of March, 1872, an act was passed authorizing the survey and marking of this part of the boundary line, (Laws of Forty-second Congress, second session, page 73, chapter 62,) which was communicated to the British minister at Washington. (Foreign Relations, 1872, page 173.)

13. The British Parliament has also made an appropriation for the same purpose, and a commission with a corresponding force has been appointed by the British government, and they have been at work one year, during which they have established the boundary at Pembina, have taken observations to ascertain the northwest corner of the Lake of the Woods, and have worked up on the line between Pembina and the Lake of the Country. They are now working up in the office the field-work of the last year, and are ready to go to work in the spring as soon as the state of the country will permit.

14. The point on the Red River near Pembina, which has heretofore been assumed to be on the forty-ninth parallel, is ascertained to be at some distance south of the real forty-ninth parallel. Settlements are being made rapidly in this region, and questions of jurisdiction and property are involved in the determination, which cannot result otherwise than in securing to the United States a strip of land of considerable value, extending the length of the boundary line between the two possessions.

15. It is respectfully submitted that, under these circumstances, it would not be to the interest of this Government, to say nothing of its not being courteous toward Great Britain, to discontinue the joint survey which Congress and the Government of the United States have authorized to be made, which has already been begun with assurance of advantages to this Government.

I also send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter of General Humphreys, of November 23, 1870, giving the details of his estimate, and I send with it a communication from Mr. Archibald Campbell, who is chief engineer of that survey, and a letter of Captain Twining, who has been employed as chief astronomer in running that survey, to Mr. Campbell. I ask that they be read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., November 23, 1870.

SIR: In reply to the communication of the 7th instant, from the Department of State, asking for an estimate of the probable cost of surveying and marking the boundary between the United States and the British possessions, from the Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains, I beg to reply that a properly organized commission, with two sets of astronomical and surveying parties to expedite the work, would require, from the estimate hereunto annexed, an expenditure of about $100,000 yearly while actually engaged upon field duties.

But it is not possible to state with certainty the length of time required to trace and mark the whole line, as the progress that would be made depends upon the nature of the country to be passed over.

The line is about eight hundred and sixty miles long. The season for working to advantage is short, and although the country is generally an open one, the number of astronomical stations to be occupied, upon which the rate of progress mainly rests, depends so much upon the distance of prominent points of elevation from each other, that they cannot be estimated.

From one month to six weeks would, no doubt, making due allowance for bad weather, be required to establish, astronomically, a point on the parallel to trace its connection with a preceding one and to move the party to the next. Should these points average fifty miles apart, there would be some seventeen stations, or, say, eight stations for each astronomical party, to occupy which would consume from eight to twelve months actual field duty for the completion of the line.

It is not probable that the parties can be kept in the field continuously for this length of time, but that the work would have to run through two seasons at least, if not longer.

The services of the officers and the greater part of their assistants would be required for another year on office-work to complete the records of the survey, so that the probable expense which would be incurred for completing the work might be set down at $325,000.

Officers of engineers have been frequently assigned to perform such duties as these, and if the demarkation of this boundary should be confided to them the estimate should be modified.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Estimate of probable cost of a commission for surveying and marking the boundaries between the United States and the British possessions.

Organization:	Per year.
1 commissioner, $4,000	$4,000
1 secretary, $2,000	2,000

Mr. Campbell to Mr. Fish.

UNITED STATES NORTHERN BOUNDARY COMMISSION,
Annandale, Dutchess County, New York, November 22, 1873.

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in your letter of the 10th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith the copy of a report from Major Twining, the chief astronomer, containing the information you desired me to communicate to the Department.

I have, &c.,

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL.

[Inclosure.]

Captain Twining to Mr. Campbell.

SAINT PAUL, November 16, 1863.

SIR: I have received yours of the 11th instant, in which you request a statement of the "location of the beginning and termination of the boundary line survey during the season, and the more important points through which it passed."

The topographical parties are still in the field and will continue their work until the 1st of February next. Even after their return it will require some time to bring their notes into such shape as to make an accurate map of the survey. I therefore inclose a general map of the country passed over, and have marked upon it the points of the boundary which have been determined by astronomical observations. I have also noted those matters of interest which have occurred to me. The survey extended fifty miles beyond the limit shown, but the map is the only one available and nothing of special interest occurs on the part omitted.

Before stating the results of the present season's work, I will give a brief résumé of the operations of last year.

The "northern boundary," as at present designated, has its initial point at the "northwesternmost point of the Lake of the Woods," and thence follows a meridian south twenty-seven miles to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and thence west along that parallel to the summit of the Rocky Mountains. In the autumn of 1872 the forty-ninth parallel was determined at Pembina, on the west bank of the Red River, and also on the east shore of the Lake of the Woods, by both English and American parties; and as the results agreed within a small limit of error, the mean of the observations was adopted. Observations were also made by the United States and English chief astronomers with the sextant, and afterward with the zenith telescope, for the latitude of the "nothwesternmost point" of the Lake of the Woods. The question in regard I have considered at length in a former report.

A sight-line, which represented, in the opinion of the United States and British chief astronomers, the true position of the north and south line, which was a part of the boundary, was cut through the woods; and finally the forty-ninth parallel of latitude was run from Pembina to the Lake of the Woods—the United States parties running thirty-three miles, and the British parties during the winter completing fifty-six miles, the remainder of the distance. The British astronomers also established in this distance two astronomical stations.

In this condition the work came under my charge as chief astronomer.

During the present season the line has been carried west from Pembina four hundred and eight and a half miles, leaving about three hundred and fifty miles yet to be completed. The longitude of the initial point is 97° 13′; that of the western end of the line 106° 18′ nearly.

Along the southern border of the province of Manitoba the line has been marked every mile by a picket and mound three feet high. These are regarded as temporary marks, to be replaced by iron monuments as soon as practicable. On the remainder of the boundary the engineers have erected stone or earthen monuments of large size, the greater number having a base of fifteen feet and a height of from five to six feet.

These larger monuments are supposed to be permanent, and are placed on conspicuous points at average intervals of three miles. In the entire distance run during the summer twenty astronomical stations have been established.

A belt of topography has been carefully surveyed along the entire length of the parallel as far as the boundary was marked. The five miles north of the line was done by the British; that to the south by the American parties. As this topographical work is included to aid in the future recognition of the boundary, it has been executed with the utmost care and accuracy. The river lines have, in some cases, been carried far beyond the five-mile limit.

The parties returning from the field have made a quite accurate survey of their respective routes, and these, in connection with similar routes to be surveyed during the next season, will form a valuable addition to our present knowledge of what has hitherto been an unexplored region.

For the purpose of determining absolute altitudes, each astronomical party has kept a careful barometric record; from the series at each station good mean results will undoubtedly be obtained.

As regards its general course, the boundary line keeps to the north of the Pembina River forty-five miles. It there crosses an open plain as far as the Turtle Mountain, which at the point of crossing is thirty-four miles in width. This mountain, or rather plateau, is exceedingly rugged, densely timbered, and covered with lakes, the largest being about a mile in width.

From the Turtle Mountain west the country possesses few points of interest, it being an open rolling prairie. The only exception to the general level is the coteau of the Missouri, which is here forty-five miles in width, and very broken.

Beds of lignite crop out along the Mouse River between the 102d and 103d meridians of longitude. These exposures are all north of the forty-ninth parallel. This coal is of average quality, similar to the lignites of the Missouri River, and probably belonging to the same formation. These deposits could not be considered of any value except in a country entirely destitute of wood.

As regards the general quality of the soil along the boundary and its capacity for supporting a large population, there is room for great difference of opinion. The soil near the Pembina River is deep and rich, and its productiveness has been demonstrated beyond a doubt. The supply of wood is sufficient for many years, and the country is sufficiently well watered.

West of Turtle Mountain the soil is poor, and the average rain-fall is too small to make it at all probable that the land could be cultivated with any success. I have heard much speculation as to the gradual effect of the advance of the settlements from the east and the extension of the cultivated areas in increasing the amount of the rain-fall on the western plains. Such anticipations can be fulfilled, if ever, only after the lapse of many years, as the changes to be effected in the climate are too great to be compassed in any short period of time. The surveying parties now in the field are engaged on the topography of the country between the Red River and the Lake of the Woods, and are expected to complete the work by the 1st of February next. This work is done in winter, as the swamps and bottomless bogs prevent its being attempted in summer.

The fatigues and exposures incident to such a work, conducted in the dead of winter, and in that inhospitable climate, are undoubtedly great, but such arrangements have been made as will insure the least possible suffering. The work is under the immediate charge of Lieutenant F. V. Greene, United States Engineers.

As only three hundred and fifty miles of the boundary remain to be surveyed, the field-work can be completed during the next season.

I am, &c.,

W. I. TWINING,
Captain of Engineers.

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, Esq.,
Commissioner Northern Boundary Survey.

Mr. SWANN. Mr. Chairman, I deem it my duty to bear witness here to the great energy, diligence, and industry, with which these gentlemen have performed this difficult service assigned to them. They have been subjected to the alternations of heat and cold, they have been running this line through a most rugged country, a country where it is almost impossible without cutting their way to mark the line which it was necessary to run. They have been frequently driven from the field by the rigors of the climate and forced to take refuge until they could resume their work. I think they have discharged their duty with ability, and that they have accomplished results, so far as they have gone, which cannot fail to be a decided advantage to the United States in all the views which can be taken of it by this House.

But, sir, whatever view you may take of the importance of this survey, it will occur to every gentleman in this House that a great nation like this should not hesitate to run the line marking her boundaries, so as to secure that protection which all governments similarly situated absolutely require. This service could not have been performed more advantageously or satisfactorily, and I think that the results show that the officers have done good service to the country, and I am prepared to bear my unqualified testimony to the zeal and fidelity with which they have performed this trust.

Sir, it would not be advisable or right to have left this line to be marked hereafter. The House is aware that when the work was commenced there were collisions then imminent between Great Britain and the United States. They had their custom-houses situated very near to what we claimed to be our northern boundary, which had not then been defined. All those differences have now been disposed of. The British engineers have acquiesced in the decision upon that point so far as it has gone, and the marking of this line will prevent hereafter for all time to come any collisions between the citizens of the two countries. As I have already said, at the time the marking of this boundary line was commenced a collision between the two governments was imminent, and it was necessary something should be done in order to establish this line in the interest of peace and harmony between nations at peace, and whose interest required that they should continue so. I say this much on the subject of this boundary line, because I presume that there is no gentleman in this House who would desire to obstruct this work, for which we have already appropriated large sums of money to accomplish it, so as to prevent the occupation of our territory by citizens of Great Britain or other powers interested in commercial pursuits, or who may hereafter desire to establish railroads or other improvements within our limits.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask my friend from Maryland a question in this connection. From the commencement of this work in 1871 down to the present time, I believe there has been no disagreement between the two governments as to the running of the line. The government of Great Britain at once acceded to our proposition to run the line on the forty-ninth parallel. Now, as a matter of fact, is it not true that our Government has gone on in violation of law, employing a commissioner at an expense of $5,000 a year, when the work was required to be done by our own engineers? And has not Great Britain done exactly what our law directed should be done? Has not Great Britain simply directed a portion of her engineers to occupy the position that our Mr. Campbell occupies, with a salary of $5,000 a year, to run this line? Has not Great Britain simply employed her regular engineer force, while our Government has appointed a commissioner at a salary of $5,000 a year to run the line?

Mr. SWANN. I will say in reply to my friend from Indiana that I am in doubt whether the engineers were appointed from the Government service or not. Some two years ago, when a proposition was before the House in relation to the running of this line, the gentleman from Indiana did not seem to have the same appreciation of its importance that I had, and I then made an application to the War Department to ascertain whether there were any engineers unoccupied in that Department who could undertake this important labor. I made the inquiry to ascertain whether or not a sufficient force could be detailed to run this line, and I found that there were not enough engineers to undertake the service or begin to perform it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not Congress imperatively provide that engineers in the regular service should be employed?

Mr. SWANN. I understand that they were to do it in case they could be spared from other branches of the Government service; not otherwise. But it so happened that we were engaged in a great many public works, and it became necessary to employ other persons; we had not the engineers to detail for that purpose. I was informed at the War Department, when I made an application for information as to whether or not they could detail a force to run this line, that they had not the officers for that purpose. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will recollect that in the discussion which took place on this subject before he did not seem, as I have before said, to have the appreciation which I thought was due to the importance of this great work. I think he suggested at the time a mode of running these surveys, that they could be run by this person and that person, unskilled in such duties, who could run this line as they would make an ordinary survey.

Mr. HOLMAN. By our engineers.

Mr. SWANN. By county engineers; by persons who were competent only to run an ordinary line of survey. But the gentleman must recollect that it required not only the skill of the ordinary engineers, who are no doubt connected with these surveys now, but astronomers and men of high skill and science, indispensable to have in performing so delicate a task. We could not afford to break down in the hands of incompetent or inexperienced persons.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; but my friend knows that our engineers, educated at West Point either as astronomers or anything else, are very competent men.

Mr. SWANN. Well, we have them now; we have Major Twining, a most accomplished gentleman. He was the only man I believe who could be detailed for the purpose at the time.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. We do not propose to discharge any of these Army engineers at all.

Mr. SWANN. No. I tell the gentleman that when he looks at the importance of this work, of the establishment of this boundary, the most important work of the kind that has ever been undertaken, I think he ought to be satisfied. Besides that we have acquired territory there, which if sold at the rate at which land is sold in his district would far more than pay for the whole expense of this boundary line.

Mr. GARFIELD. The whole survey would not cost as much as this single piece of property.

Mr. SWANN. That is substantially true.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was merely running the forty-ninth parallel.

Mr. SWANN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The trouble was nobody could find where the forty-ninth parallel was.

Mr. SWANN. And after you had run the line, if you had not had competent men for the purpose, it would have been upset by the British commissioners, who would have found some flaw in it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was said that the first line run was very well marked. As the Delegate from Dakota told us, it was marked by well-defined p'les of champagne bottles from one end to the other. But in coming back and putting up the monuments they made mistakes.

Mr. SWANN. Well, they made a good boundary line. I should have no objection to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Did the Delegate say that they made the line well enough when they had champagne enough.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Champagne bottles make a good line to run away from.

Mr. SWANN. Great Britain has been at great expense to send her best men there, and the gentleman would have been very much mortified if we had sent men there whose labor had resulted in a mistake.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that our own officers shall be employed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that the gentleman from Indiana will not longer interrupt the progress of public business by remarks of this sort.

Mr. SWANN. All the engineers at the disposal of the Engineer Department at the time this line was projected were employed. I think Major Twining is perhaps the only man who could have done the duty of astronomer in fixing this line.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know he is a very competent gentleman.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. And the pay is small.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he is willing to let this bill pass without any further objection?

Mr. SWANN. I do not think the gentleman will antagonize us. I will not dwell longer on this subject. I have been very reluctant to detain the committee by this explanation of the bill. In reference to the amendment by my friend before me, [Mr. ORTH,] from the Committee on Foreign Relations, I desire to say that when it shall be presented I shall move an amendment with which I believe he cordially concurs.

Mr. ORTH. Striking out the second section.

Mr. SWANN. I will send it to the Clerk's desk that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment, to be offered by Mr. ORTH to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Strike out section 2 and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

SEC. —. That there shall be allowed for the hire of clerks, when actually expended therefor, as follows: To the consul-general of Havana and consul at Liverpool, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $3,000 for any one year; and to the consuls-general of London, Paris, and Shanghai, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; to the consuls-general at Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, and Montreal, and to the consuls at Hamburg, Leipsic, Lyons, Manchester, Beirut, Belfast, Birmingham, Bradford, Chemnitz, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Fayal, Nuremberg, Leith, Naples, Stuttgart, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500 for any one year.

Strike out of section 3 the words "one thousand six hundred," and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

Mr. SWANN. I do not desire to detain the committee further. I have made the explanations I cared to make at this point. When the bill comes to be read for amendment, I deem it proper to give notice here that I shall have two or three amendments to offer in reference to the consular reorganization which is to be presented by my friend from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will now consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move then that the committee rise. I believe there is one other gentleman who wishes to speak at some length.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BURCHARD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes; and the bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; and had directed him to report back the former with sundry amendments, and to report that on the latter the committee had come to no resolution.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the previous question on the deficiency appropriation bill just reported with amendments from the Committee of the Whole. If no separate vote is asked on the amendments, I presume the bill can pass now.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a separate vote on the amendment creating a new office for getting up some historical matters connected with the Indians.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the other amendments will be regarded as concurred in. The amendment referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 576 of the bill the following:

For continuing the collection of statistics and historical data respecting the Indians of the United States, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500: Provided, That the compensation of the person collecting such data shall not exceed $2,000 a year and his actual individual and necessary traveling expenses.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 19, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a further count insisted on?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; I insist that new offices shall not be created or salaries increased without the vote of a quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 104, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, there were on a division—ayes 113, noes 45.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF LAWS RELATING TO THE DISTRICT.

Mr. POLAND. I desire the attention of the House for about two minutes. The revision of our statutes as passed by the House some six weeks ago did not contain any chapter in reference to the District of Columbia. The commissioners, for reasons which they thought satisfactory, omitted this subject in their revision. Both the House and the Senate Committee on the Revision agreed that there ought to be a revision of the acts of Congress relating to the District of Columbia. We have therefore procured to be made a revision of the general statutes relating to the District; but it was not completed in time to be acted upon with the general revision of the laws. It was prepared as a chapter of the revision, to be connected with it; but the committee on the part of the House have decided to make it a separate thing. The general revision will fill one volume—a large volume—and it will not do, we think, to add to its size. This revision of the laws in reference to the District of Columbia will therefore have to go into a second volume, along with the treaties and the laws relating to post-roads. Hence instead of making this a chapter of the general revision, we have made it a separate act, giving the sections a new numbering, and making it subject to the provisions of the repealing section of the general revision.

I have just received notice from the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Revision of the Laws that they are about to act upon the revision, and desire that we shall send this part of the revision to them, so that the whole matter may be taken up together. The committee of the House have carefully examined this revision, have inserted all their amendments, and have placed upon it the same provisions and saving clauses that were attached to the general revision; and as it will take three or four days to enroll this, even using a printed copy, I ask unanimous consent that this revision may be adopted now, and also that it may be enrolled upon a printed copy, as was done with the general revision.

Mr. MAYNARD. There have been two revisals or attempted revisals of the laws of this District since I have been in Congress—one in 1858, and the other about ten years ago. The second was under the general supervision of the present clerk of the supreme court of the District. Neither of those revisals was vitalized by the affirmative action of Congress; both therefore remained incomplete. Can the gentleman from Vermont tell us whether in this recent revision any use has been made of the work that was formerly done under the direction of Congress, or whether this that he now proposes to submit is a new work entirely?

Mr. POLAND. I am not aware there was any use made of the former revision; indeed, I have never seen it. In looking up this matter I found Congress did expend some $30,000 to have a revision made, which was by act of Congress submitted to a vote of the people of this District, and they refused to ratify it. That is the one to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is one; that is the revision of 1857. Another one was of very recent date. I do not recollect there was any definite action taken in regard to it on the part of Congress.

Mr. POLAND. I have not traced the history of these things. Neither ever became operative or effective in any way. I am not aware that Mr. Durant, who did this work in the main, except as amended and altered in some respects by the committee, had access to any such revision.

Mr. MAYNARD. There is another point in reference to which I should like to ask the gentleman a question. It is known the laws of Maryland in force at the time of the organization of the District of Columbia were adopted in a body, and have remained in force I believe, except as they have been modified from time to time or repealed, until the present. Does this revision incorporate in it these Maryland laws?

Mr. POLAND. Not at all. It is a revision of the acts of Congress in reference to the District of Columbia and contains nothing but enactments of Congress, and those statutes only of a general nature.

Mr. MAYNARD. Would it not be well now as far as practicable, and I think it is practicable entirely, to revise those old Maryland statutes, and either repeal them altogether or modify them or re-enact them? I understand from a gentleman connected with the administration of law in the District of Columbia that they frequently present troublesome and perplexing questions, arising out of some new state of facts.

Mr. POLAND. I can state to the gentleman from Tennessee the District Legislature appointed some commissioners two years or more ago for the purpose of revising all the laws of the District of Columbia, not only acts of Congress, but the acts of their own Legislature and the old Maryland laws under which they live and to which the gentleman has referred. That revision has been made by commissioners in the District, and is now before the District Legislature for action. Acting under the law of Congress in reference to this revision, of course this revision in all its parts has been merely a revision of the acts of Congress, and nothing more. The same course has been pursued in reference to the laws of Congress relating to this District.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not wish to be troublesome, but I will ask another question. I place implicit confidence in the committee. The gentleman has stated that the treaties and the post-office laws and the laws relating to the District of Columbia will be arranged in a volume by themselves.

Mr. POLAND. That is what we propose.

Mr. MAYNARD. He proposes to incorporate the treaties and the laws relative to the post-offices and post-roads in the same volume with the laws relating to this District. That would make a bulky and cumbrous volume. The laws in relation to the District would be comparatively small and easy of use. It is a body of laws used practically much oftener than the general statutes of the country.

Mr. POLAND. What I said in regard to the volumes is of course not before the House. It was merely a suggestion of what was the idea of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. We merely ask to have this passed. As to how it is to be published, of course is a matter for after consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope after the immense amount of labor expended on this bill by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws it will be adopted as suggested. Of course there is nothing in it increasing salaries.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is no new law in it at all.

Mr. POLAND. I now report from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws an act (H. R. No. 3348) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, prior to the 1st December, 1873.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be engrossed by being printed, as in the other case.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS OF OFFICERS.

Mr. ALBRIGHT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3349) for the protection of the widows and orphans and heirs at law of officers of the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. COTTON was granted leave of absence for one day and Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, for one week.

And then, on motion of Mr. GARFIELD, (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ALBERT: The petition of Rev. William J. Chiles, of Charles County, Maryland, to be compensated for provisions taken for the use of the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ALBRIGHT: The petition of Margaret T. Duff, to have the name of her late husband, John W. Duff, who died in a rebel prison, entered on the rolls of Company B, Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, and his military record made up in accordance with the facts of the case, to enable her to obtain arrears of pay, bounty, and pension, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FARWELL: The petition of numerous western pork-dealers for the exemption of swine from certain provisions of the law regulating the transportation of live stock, to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FIELD: The petition of C. B. James & Co. and others, for the substitution of specific for ad valorem duties on tin plates, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WILLARD, of Michigan: The petition of Lorenzo D. Quackenbush and Hannah Quackenbush, of Hastings, Michigan, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will come to order, and the Secretary will count the Senators to ascertain if there be a quorum present.

After a count by the Secretary,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are but twelve Senators present—less than a quorum.

Mr. SARGENT, (at eleven o'clock and five minutes a. m.) What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question and no quorum.

Mr. SARGENT. Has a division disclosed the lack of a quorum?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair discovers that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SARGENT. I respectfully submit to the Chair that unless on a division it is ascertained there is no quorum present a quorum is presumed to be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first rule of the Senate is as follows:

> The Presiding Officer having taken the chair, and a quorum being present, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. I move a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll will be called.

The Chief Clerk called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

> PRESENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boreman, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stockton, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, Windom, and Wright—40.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call shows 40 Senators to be present. That being a quorum of the Senate, the Secretary will read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the further reading of the Journal will be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to hear it read. There were a good many important matters decided yesterday that I wish to know how they appear on the Journal. I insist that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will be read.

The Secretary continued the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings. Having proceeded for some time,

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the reading be dispensed with until the Senator from Vermont shall get done reading his book.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the reading go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of yesterday.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet again on Monday at the usual hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let us understand that. Does it mean eleven o'clock?

Mr. CAMERON. Eleven o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eleven o'clock is the usual hour of meeting now.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALCORN presented a memorial numerously signed by citizens of Coahoma County, Mississippi, praying the Government of the United States to take charge of the levees upon the Mississippi River, declaring that unless it be done the whole country of the Delta will be deserted; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Levees of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SPENCER. I present the memorial of H. M. Turner and numerous other citizens of Georgia, complaining of the unequal distribution of arms furnished by the Government of the United States to the State of Georgia. I ask that the memorial be read to the Senate, and then referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the memorial which he offers may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, citizens of the State of Georgia, respectfully show that the laws of Georgia relating to the organization of volunteer militia companies provide that such companies may be organized anywhere within the State; that when the requisite number of members has been enrolled, the governor shall be notified, and he "shall order an election for captain and subaltern officers, under such superintendence as he may prescribe," (see Code of Georgia of 1873, pages 182 and 183.) Previous to 1872 it was made the duty of the governor to supply arms and accouterments to the volunteer companies, whether uniformed or not, upon requisition, in such manner and upon such terms as he might direct, from the quota of arms distributed to the several States, under the laws of Congress, or from other arms belonging to the State, (see Irwin's Code of Georgia, section 1085.)

On the 24th day of August, 1872, a law was passed by the democratic Legislature of Georgia which provides: "That it shall be the duty of the governor to distribute such arms as he now has, or may hereafter receive, first to such companies as were organized and existing prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, as have already, or may within the next three months after the passage of this act reorganize; and, as to such companies, preference shall be given according to their original priority. That in all cases of companies organized since the 1st day of January, 1872, and notwithstanding those complying with all the rules and regulations prescribed by the governor in order to secure arms, it shall be within the power of the governor to furnish arms or not according to his discretion." (See Laws of Georgia, 1872, page 59.)

On the 22d day of February, 1873, the democratic Legislature of the State amended the act of August 24, 1872, as follows: "That from and after the passage of this act the governor of the State shall have power to make such distribution of arms, as he now has, or may hereafter receive, among the military organizations now in existence, or to be hereafter formed, as, in his judgment, may be most conducive to the public interest." (See Laws of Georgia, 1873, page 70.)

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is it too late to object to the reading of that paper?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair called for objections and none were made. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the memorial, as follows:

The State of Georgia has received from the United States since the close of the late war, 1,180 breech-loading rifled muskets, 870 rifled muskets, 520 pistols, 500 cavalry sabers, 5 light 12-pounder bronze guns, and 50 non-commissioned officers' swords with accouterments, cartridges, &c., amounting in all to the value of $64,105.38. The governor has distributed them as follows: To 21 white companies 1,180 breech-loading rifled muskets; to 14 white companies 700 rifled muskets; to 10 white companies 410 pistols and 410 sabers, and to white companies 5 light 12-pounder bronze guns; to 3 colored companies but 150 rifled muskets. It will be seen that 45 white companies have been armed with muskets, pistols, and sabers, and that but 3 colored companies have been armed, that the breech-loading rifled muskets, pistols, and sabers were all distributed to white companies, and the colored companies put off with muzzle-loading muskets. The governor has refused to organize companies composed of colored men, as we believe because they are colored men, although it is made his duty by the laws of Georgia to organize all companies that have the required number of men enrolled. He has refused to distribute arms furnished to the State by the United States to companies composed of colored men as we believe because they are colored men, in violation of the act of Congress of March 3, 1873, which provides: "That in the organization and equipment of military companies and organizations with said arms, no discrimination shall be made on account of race, color, or former condition of servitude." Your memorialists assert that it was the purpose of the Legislature in passing the acts of August 24, 1872, and February 22, 1873, to so legislate that the governor could refuse to distribute arms to companies of colored men; and they further assert that the governor of Georgia has, in the organization and equipment of military companies with the arms distributed to the State by the United States, made a discrimination between said companies on account of race, color, and former condition of servitude.

He has refused to organize and equip companies composed of colored men who complied with the law in the same manner as companies composed of white men, who were organized and equipped by him.

The 12-pounder bronze guns, the pistols, sabers, and breech-loading rifled muskets which the United States furnished to the State were all distributed among companies composed of white men; and the very few arms which the three colored companies received were nothing but the muzzle-loading musket.

Your memorialists are alarmed at the refusal of Governor Smith to organize and equip companies composed of colored men. They are fully convinced that the democratic rulers of Georgia intend, so far as possible, to keep the colored people of the State in ignorance, by neglecting to establish schools for their education, and prevent them from organizing military companies, so that they will be weak, while cunningly devised plans are matured to absolutely control their labor. A secret society of planters, known as "Patrons of Husbandry," has been organized in this State. A member of the executive committee of the State organization recently stated, in Atlanta, that while there is nothing political in their organization, "there is no disguising one thing, though, and that is that the farmers are all going to vote together. They will, of course, vote en masse for that measure which is to their interest. In this way they will become a fearful power in politics, as in everything else." It is well known that the "farmers" alluded to are all white planters; that most of them were secessionists and now act with the democratic party; that but very few, if any, are laboring men, and that they employ colored men as laborers on their plantations. Mr. Benjamin H. Hill, a planter, and one of the ablest and most influential democratic politicians in the State, in a recent speech before a large assembly of the planters, said: "I would give the negro every right to which he is entitled under the laws, but he is entitled under no law to become the destroyer of his neighbor's property, nor to keep the white race of the South in poverty and bondage." "The first thing to be done is to secure home government for home affairs. This is our right and our necessity. We must get control of our own labor and regulate our own industry." "With State governments for State affairs, every other good will follow. Without these every evil is inevitable." In other words, unless the "white race of the South" can get control of their own labor and regulate their own industry, they will be kept in "poverty and bondage."

At a convention of white planters of Georgia, held in Athens a few weeks since, the democratic governor of the State, Hon. James M. Smith, said that the laws of the State should be so amended as to control labor. "We may," he said, "hold inviolate every law of the United States, and still so legislate upon our labor system as to retain our old plantation system, or in lieu of that establish a baronial one." Alluding to the "Patrons of Husbandry," he said:

"If they do no other good, their combination will produce a sense of their power, which will be felt in our State and national halls." We were informed by the democratic papers of the State that this speech was received by the planters "with repeated and uproarious applause." Your memoralists, therefore, feel warranted in saying that the refusal of Governor Smith to organize and arm companies composed of colored men is a part of the plan to control their labor.

Your memorialists respectfully call your attention to the following additional facts: All, or nearly all, of the white companies are composed of men who fought in the confederate army to destroy the Union. Many of the colored companies are composed of men who fought in the Union Army to sustain the Government. The white companies choose the confederate gray for their uniforms. The colored companies prefer the Union blue. On the 19th day of January last the white companies of Savannah celebrated the anniversary of the birth of General Robert E. Lee, (to which, however, we did not object,) and were reviewed by General Joseph E. Johnston. No national flag was displayed by the companies, twelve in all, although a confederate battle-flag, carried through the late war by the fifty-fourth Georgia regiment, was noticed as the "brigade" marched through the street, and it marked the post of honor, where General Johnston stood to review the "brigade." Recently three white companies in Atlanta met for parade, when the commander of the "battalion" requested the captain of one of the companies to send his colors—a national flag—from the line, saying the flag was objectionable to himself and the majority of the men in the companies, and they would not march in the column with it. When colored companies parade, they honor the national flag.

Your memorialists respectfully make known the grievances of which they complain, and pray that your honorable body will provide "for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia" of Georgia, so that military companies composed of friends of the Union may enjoy the same privileges that its late opponents enjoy, and that "in the organization and equipment of military companies" "no discrimination shall be made between said companies on account of race, color, or former condition of servitude."

We certify that the above memorial was adopted at a military convention, composed of delegates from various parts of the State, held at Savannah on the 25th day of February, 1874.

H. M. TURNER,
President of Convention.

Attest: J. H. DEVEAUX,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what committee shall this petition be referred?

Mr. SPENCER. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a mail-route from Willmar, in Kandiyohi County, to Vicksburgh, in Renville County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a post-route from Faribault, in that State, to Winnebago County, in the State of Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a post-route in the counties of Sibley, McLeod, and Renville, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the establishment of a post-route from Buffalo, in Wright County, to Dayton, in Hennapin County, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. RAMSEY. I present also a joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, asking Congress to vacate the Fort Ripley reservation. For several years authority has existed in the Secretary of War, by law, to vacate this reservation, and perhaps the best course would be to refer the memorial to the Secretary of War; and I suggest that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the Senator can refer it to the Secretary of War. It would be an unusual thing for the Senate to do so.

Mr. RAMSEY. I find on looking further into it that the memorial suggests legislation. I move, therefore, that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of the erection of a custom-house at Du Luth, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation for improving the navigation of the River and Lake Saint Croix; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of a law to enable a certain class of settlers to purchase timber lands at the minimum price for farm purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of citizens of Nebraska, remonstrating against the extension to Jonathan Haines of his patent for the Haines Harvester; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Seward County, Nebraska, praying the passage of a law permitting the manufacture, use, and sale of patent-right articles by others than the owners of patent rights on the payment of a reasonable royalty to such owners of patent rights; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DENNIS. I present a memorial of a convention of citizens of the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and of the District of Columbia, praying that the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army be directed to cause further surveys and estimates to be made of the cost of connecting the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal with the Ohio River, and that the appropriation which he has estimated as required for that purpose may be made. As this is a matter of very great importance to those States as well as to the United States, I move that this memorial be printed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board have already reported upon that subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of John H. Cooper, W. C. Fowler, and others, officers of the Maryland pilots, remonstrating against the passage of a law abolishing the present system of compulsory pilotage; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GORDON presented the petition of John F. Porteores, a citizen of Beaufort, South Carolina, praying compensation for the use of his property, occupied by United States troops during the late war as a hospital, and also the privilege of redeeming it by the payment of the taxes upon it, claimed to be due by the Government, and held by it on that account; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 3073 was indefinitely postponed, and that it may be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a bill (H. R. No. 3073) to amend section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States." I have received further information from the State Department on the subject.

There being no objection, the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely was reconsidered, and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT. Under instructions from the Committee on Claims, I move to recommit to that committee House joint resolution No. 94, directing the commissioners of claims to send to Congress without delay the claims decided prior to April 1, 1874, which was reported adversely a few days since.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CONOVER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of J. Berrian be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Rebecca Frances Bailey be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2187) authorizing and requiring the issuance of a patent for certain land in the county of Scott, in the State of Missouri, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 277) making appropriations for the payment of $792.46 due the late James L. Day, of Connecticut, for transporting the mails over post-route numbered 1051, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Dawson, late collector of internal revenue, fifth district of Maryland, praying the enactment of a law reimbursing him for certain moneys captured from his deputy by the rebel forces, reported a bill (S. No. 819) for the relief of George W. Dawson, late collector; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 51) in reference to civil-service examinations, to report it back favorably, and if it is in order or proper for the Senate to do so, I move that it be amended so as to be converted into a bill. I am not sure whether that can be done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can amend it by turning it into a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would say to the Senator that the practice has been when joint resolutions come from the House, not to change their form because it interrupts their method of keeping the records.

Mr. SHERMAN. With that exception, the committee report favorably.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That makes us violate the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have that matter settled definitely, because it is very inconvenient to have important legislation of this kind put in the shape of a resolution and not indexed with the laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a question entirely for the committee. It can recommend that amendment as much as any other.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I hope that amendment will be adopted, and the resolution take its place on the Calendar as a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee recommend that the joint resolution be amended in that particular; and it will go on the Calendar with that report.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, who were instructed by the Senate to inquire into the numbers and distribution of the public documents, bills, or reports printed by the Congressional Printer, and to report what changes, if any, are necessary, and also to report suitable measures for the distribution of public documents, have instructed me to submit a report in writing with the draught of a bill accompanying it.

This report has been prepared with a great deal of labor and care, and yet it is doubtless very imperfect. We have been obliged to consult the heads of Departments and Bureaus, and many other officers. The committee desire to have this report printed and hope that Senators will examine it and be ready when the bill is taken up to make any suggestion of amendment that may occur to them. We shall be happy to have these suggestions made to the committee, as I propose moving that the report be printed and recommitted to the committee, and I give notice that I shall call up the bill after it is reported in form, at the earliest time after Senators shall have had an opportunity to examine it.

The report was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that fifty additional copies of the report be printed for the use of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 581) amendatory of and supplementary to the act entitled "An act to set apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park," approved March 1, 1872, which was a bill reported originally from the Committee on Public Lands in place of one referred to them, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate with additional amendments. They have corrected the bill by amending the first section in the respect of adding the original section of the law which was amended by the first section of this bill. They have reproduced that section in full so as to remove from the minds of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws any confusion in revising the statutes hereafter. In that respect they suppose they have met the objections which were made against the bill as a matter of form. Some other amendments have been made, and I am instructed by the committee to report the bill back with these amendments and recommend its passage, no additional written report being made to that presented in the first instance.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2898) for the relief of J. and W. R. Wing, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, reported it without amendment.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—THE CURRENCY.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. The other day I was called to order in the middle of a sentence; and as a question of privilege I rise now to complete that sentence where I was interrupted by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, I do not ask any consent. I rise to a question of privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is out of order. No question is before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I will ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent to make a personal explanation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. What I said was this:

The policy that has been announced in the veto message would show that it is extremely doubtful——

There the Chair said that I was out of order; I read from the RECORD:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is out of order in alluding to the Executive or what course he may pursue on this subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I simply alluded to his late message. I think I have a right to discuss a message of the President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator was not speaking of the message, but predicting that the same thing would follow on this bill if it should pass at 25 per cent. The Chair thinks that is out of order.

Now I wish to call the Chair to order and assert that I was in order; for if I had been let alone I should have said this, and I intended to say this: The policy that has been announced in the veto message would show that it is extremely doubtful whether the President will sanction any inflation of an irredeemable currency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would have been out of order then, and is out of order now.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the Senator from Michigan will take his seat. [Laughter.]

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am instructed by a majority of the Committee on the Revision of the Rules to report back a resolution, submitted on the 6th instant by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the eleventh rule of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following words:

Nor shall such debate be allowed upon any motion to dispose of a pending matter and proceed to consider another. When a question is under consideration, the debate thereon shall be germane to such question or to the subject to which it relates.

The amendment of the committee was to amend the resolution and insert after the word "debate" the words "upon the question proposed to be considered."

Mr. CONKLING. I think that had better be printed that we may understand what we are to vote for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York objects to the present consideration of the resolution. It will be laid over under the rules.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 820) to establish a Bureau of Internal Commerce; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 821) for the relief of Peaslee & McClary, late carriers of mails, of Nashua, New Hampshire; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 822) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 823) to remove the political disabilities of John Forsyth, of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FLAG OF CALIFORNIA SILK.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform the Senate what person has the custody of the flag manufactured of California silk, heretofore presented to the Senate, and by the Senate directed to be placed at the disposal of the American commissioners to the Vienna international exhibition, to be returned to the Senate at the close of the exhibition; also to take such action as will secure, if possible, a return to the Senate of said flag.

SALE OF CHIPPEWA PINE TIMBER.

Mr. SCOTT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interest, any opinion given by the Attorney-General upon the legality of a sale of pine timber belonging to the Chippewa Indians to A. H. Wilder, of Minnesota.

MILITARY PRISON.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2074) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a military prison and for its government," approved March 3, 1873. It will not take a moment to explain it, and I am satisfied there will be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which amends the act of March 3, 1873, so that all acts and things therein required to be done and performed at Rock Island, Illinois, shall be done and performed on the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; and the Government buildings now on the reservation at Fort Leavenworth are to be modified and used so far as practicable for the purposes of the prison.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] asks me about the bill. I will explain it. At the last session of Congress an act was passed authorizing a commission to establish a military prison, with rules and the regulations prescribed, and the military prison was in the law provided to be established at Rock Island, Illinois. Since then the commission have reported that, on account of other public buildings there for ordnance and other things, it would not be a proper location, and recommend that the prison be located at Fort Leavenworth where there are buildings that may be temporarily used for the purpose. The Secretary of War so recommends, and our committee have reported back this bill so as to transfer the location merely. That is all there is in it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move to take up the resolution offered by myself a few days ago asking for certain correspondence in relation to Arkansas affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, all papers and correspondence relating to the troubles in the State of Arkansas that may be in his possession.

Mr. CLAYTON. I desire to say that while it is a fact that by resolution of the House of Representatives this correspondence has been asked for, the correspondence sent the House has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, and therefore is not to be had by this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not printed?

Mr. CLAYTON. Only a portion of it. What I desire is to get the entire correspondence up to this date for the information of the Senate. I presume there is no objection to it.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator want the correspondence not laid before the House?

Mr. CLAYTON. I want all the correspondence; the correspondence heretofore sent to the House, and the entire correspondence up to this date for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. We have upon our desk the correspondence furnished to the House printed up to a certain time. What is the necessity of calling for that? We have it here printed. It seems to me the resolution should be changed so as to read "all correspondence not heretofore furnished," and that will give us all there is.

Mr. CLAYTON. There may have been some furnished in the last few days and referred directly to the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then that will come within the scope of the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should be willing to have it so amended as to call for all the correspondence not heretofore furnished to the House and printed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Put it in that way.

Mr. CLAYTON. What I want is to get all the correspondence.

Mr. HAMLIN. All since the date of that which was printed. We do not want that duplicated over again.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let the resolution be modified in the way I have suggested.

Mr. SHERMAN. Say "all correspondence not heretofore communicated to either House of Congress."

Mr. CLAYTON. That will answer my purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

PRESIDIO RESERVATION.

Mr. HAGER. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a little bill that will not occupy more than two minutes. It is the bill (S. No. 492) authorizing the city and county of San Francisco to use the Presidio reservation as a park and highway.

Mr. SCOTT. I inquire of the Senator from California whether that bill is likely to lead to any debate?

Mr. HAGER. I presume not. It has a favorable report from the committee, the Secretary of War, the Engineer Department, and the soldiers having charge of the Presidio.

Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that that bill has heretofore been the subject of debate in the Senate. I think so.

Mr. HAGER. It has been so modified now that I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. SCOTT. In pursuance of the notice which I gave, at the expiration of the morning hour I shall feel it my duty to move to take up the bills from the Committee on Claims. I do not wish to be precluded from doing so.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this bill may be disposed of by that time; but if it is then likely to lead to prolonged debate it can be postponed.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no objection to the bill being taken up during the residue of the morning hour, but I shall at twelve o'clock make my motion.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest that the bill be taken up subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert the following as a substitute:

That the use of the Presidio military reservation in the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, is hereby granted to the city and county of San Francisco, to be enjoyed solely for the purposes of a park and highway, upon the following express conditions: first, the fee to said reservation and the right of way through said park, for free communication with the forts, military establishments, and grounds, Presidio barracks, and public buildings of the United States, shall remain in and is reserved to the United States; secondly, that portion, not exceeding three hundred acres in extent, comprising the site of the fortifications at and about Fort Point; and that portion, not exceeding one hundred acres in extent, comprising the site of the Presidio barracks and the buildings of the United States erected thereon; and also such parts of said reservation as may be hereafter selected by the authorities of the United States for the erection of public buildings or works, and so much land appurtenant thereto as may be necessary or expedient for the use of the United States, are reserved and exempted from the provisions of this act; lastly, the United States military authorities may, in time of war or great public danger, or in case such reservation, or any part thereof, is claimed or occupied by any person other than the authorities of said city and county, or for purposes other than is in this act provided, take possession of the whole or any portion of said park for military purposes, or for the purpose of expelling such persons therefrom, without any liability therefor for damage to said city and county or any person whomsoever: Provided, That after twenty years from the passage of this act the Government may, upon sixty days' notice to said city and county, retake entire possession of said premises for any purpose whatsoever, without any liability for any damage therefor to said city and county or to any person whomsoever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to inquire, before I object, whereabouts this land lies?

Mr. HAGER. It lies within the limits of the city and county of San Francisco. The bill in the shape in which it is now before the Senate is unobjectionable, I believe, to all parties. It merely grants the use of the reservation, reserving the title in the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many acres are there in it?

Mr. HAGER. Altogether about thirteen hundred, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the park that lies over toward the sea?

Mr. HAGER. On the promontory near the ocean.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will not insist on taking up that bill to-day. It was under discussion some sessions ago, and I have some papers and a map about it which I should like to have time to examine.

Mr. HAGER. If the Senator will allow me, the reason why I urge it now is that we have two seasons, called the wet and the dry, and if anything is to be done in regard to placing this land in a condition to be used as a driving park, it should be done at once; otherwise, it will be postponed for a year. If the Senator will abide by the recommendation of the Military Committee, who have considered the bill, and advised with the Secretary of War and with the Engineer Department and with the general in command of the Presidio, all agreeing to the bill in the form in which it is now presented, he will not make the objection under the circumstances. No title to any land passes by the bill, as the Senator will observe on reading it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have as great respect for the Committee on Military Affairs as for any committee of this body, which is the very highest. We all know that every committee makes reports subject to the fair right of Senators to differ with them, if they see reason for it, I suppose. Now, my point is—and I only state it because I do not wish to have the bill come up this morning; I am not ready to consider it—that this land which it is proposed in effect to give to the city of San Francisco is worth two or three million dollars. If it is not needed for military purposes, it ought to be sold and the money ought to be turned into the Treasury of the United States, I think;

but I may be mistaken about that. Certainly it requires fair consideration and investigation. I did not know there was such a bill on the Calendar this year.

Mr. HAGER. I have been waiting for months to have it considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will not insist on taking it up this morning, for I wish to have an opportunity to examine it and perhaps discuss it.

Mr. SCOTT. It is within the recollection of all of us that when this bill has been before the Senate heretofore it has been treated as in the nature of a donation of some thirteen hundred acres of land worth two or three million dollars, which will inevitably give rise to objection. I therefore deem it my duty to object, for the purpose of moving to proceed, as heretofore announced, to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator to withdraw the objection for two minutes. I should like to occupy two minutes on this subject. That certainly is a reasonable request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion made by the Senator from California to proceed to the consideration of the bill is in order. The Chair asked if there was objection to the motion, to save the trouble of putting the question to a vote, if no objection was made.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I will state as a reason why we ought not to proceed with it that it will interfere with what is virtually the order of the Senate for to-day. I do not wish to preclude the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] from stating anything he has to urge.

Mr. HAGER. I will ask the Senate to consent to let this bill be taken up on Tuesday next. The reason why I urge it is in consequence of the two seasons we have, the wet and the dry, as I said; and if anything is to be done at all, it must be done speedily. I am quite satisfied that Senators will not object to the bill in the form in which it is now presented. It is entirely different from the bills heretofore presented. There is no grant of title, as Senators will see on reading the bill. It merely grants the privilege of using the reservation as a driving park so long as the Government see fit to indulge the citizens of San Francisco in its use for that purpose. If the Government wish to sell it they can do so; but no one who understands it would advise its sale at this time. It is not valuable for any purpose of business or residence. It has no value at this time for any purpose of that kind. The Presidio barracks and fortifications are there, and the Government is about to build a hospital upon it, I understand; so that no one, I think, under the circumstances, would advise its sale. I do not wish to press the bill upon the Senate now if Senators are not acquainted with it; and I will therefore ask, if that be satisfactory, with the consent of the Senate, to have it considered on Tuesday next, in order that we may improve the reservation during the dry season if the bill should pass and become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered on Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot consent to its being made a special order by unanimous consent, because we may be crowded by the appropriation bills and other important bills that must be passed. I certainly hereafter shall interpose no opposition merely on the ground that I am not ready to consider the bill, whenever the Senator shall move to take it up after to-day. He need not delay on account of any want of preparation that I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California may accomplish his purpose by giving notice of his intention to call the bill up.

Mr. HAGER. I give notice, then, that I shall call up the bill on Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California withdraws his motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill at the present time, and gives notice that he will ask the Senate to consider it on Tuesday next.

LOUISA H. HASELL.

Mr. SCOTT. In accordance with previous notice, I now move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 91, that being the first bill from the Committee on Claims which I propose to call up, intending to follow it with other bills from the same committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 91) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell.

The bill appropriates $350, in full compensation for the use by the United States Army of the house and other buildings in Summerville, South Carolina, belonging to Mrs. Louisa H. Hasell, during the years 1865 and 1866, and in full satisfaction for any damage to the property arising from or incident to its occupation by the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE M. PURVIANCE AND FRANCIS WYETH.

Mr. SCOTT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 644.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 644) for the relief of Caroline M. Purviance and Francis Wyeth was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed by the bill to pay to Caroline M. Purviance and Francis Wyeth $4,500, the same to be in full satisfaction to them and all persons claiming under them for the use and occupation of and destruction to their property by the military authorities of the United States in Saint Joseph, Missouri, in the years 1861, 1862, 1863.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN T. WATSON.

Mr. SCOTT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1271, for the relief of John T. Watson, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Mr. COOPER. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania why he skips the next bill in the order of business reported from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SCOTT. What is that?

Mr. COOPER. Senate bill No. 647, "to pay James and Emma S. Cameron for property taken and used by the Army during the late war."

Mr. SCOTT. I will state to the Senator the reason why I do that. I have selected for consideration first such reports as I believe will not give rise to any objection or debate, intending to defer the consideration of those which I suppose will give rise to some debate to the last.

Mr. COOPER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1271) for the relief of John T. Watson, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John T. Watson $3,962, in full compensation for his expenditures and losses in rescuing United States officers and soldiers from the disaster of the steamboat Sultana, destroyed by fire on the night of April 26, 1865, on the Mississippi River.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BIGLER, YOUNG & CO.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 228.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 228) for the relief of Bigler, Young & Co.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the claim of Bigler, Young & Co., of Pennsylvania, for the erection of the lighthouse at Love Point, in the Chesapeake Bay, on principles of equity and justice; but the amount allowed them is not to exceed the sum of $1,694.55.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN HOFF, CASPER DOERR, AND GEORGE GEBHART.

Mr. SCOTT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2100.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2100) for the relief of Martin Hoff, Casper Doerr, and George Gebhart, citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed by the bill to pay $2,618.62 to Martin Hoff and Casper Doerr, for work and labor performed and material furnished by them in curbing, guttering, and macadamizing, and cross-walks on Marine avenue, and paving alley in front of and adjoining United States marine hospital in the city of Saint Louis, Missouri; and the sum of $616.58 to George Gebhart for work performed and material furnished in paving sidewalks on Marine avenue, adjoining to and in front of the United States marine hospital in Saint Louis; in all, the sum of $3,235.20.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

S. D. HICKS.

Mr. SCOTT. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2332, for the relief of S. D. Hicks, administrator of R. M. Harvey.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask the Senator not to take up that bill now, for this reason——

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Virginia desires that the bill shall be passed over I will not move its consideration.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Let it be passed over for the present.

W. A. SAYLOR.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2346.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2346) for the relief of W. A. Saylor, of Bryan, Texas.

The bill proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund $1,871.53 to W. A. Saylor, of Bryan, Texas, for taxes illegally collected on certain parcels of cotton during the years 1867 and 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

P. HORNBROOK.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2205.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2205) for the relief of P. Hornbrook was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow, in the accounts of P. Hornbrook, surveyor of customs for the port of Evansville, Indiana, the sum of $872.35, being amount of payments made to John J. Hays for salary as store-keeper, from December 1, 1870, to December 11, 1871, and vouchers furnished therefor by Hornbrook, and disallowed in the settlement of his accounts for want of the oath of Hays.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL S. POTTER.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 786.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 786) for the relief of Samuel S. Potter, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary of the Treasury is directed by the bill to pay to Samuel S. Potter $750, in full of all claims against the Government for expenses incurred by Potter by reason of the seizure of his seminary building by J. F. Head, medical director of the district of Kentucky, for hospital purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOONER ADA A. ANDREWS.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the assent of my friend from Pennsylvania, I wish to call his attention to the fact that he has just passed over a bill which, although it does not come from the Committee on Claims, is a step-child of that committee, having been first considered by that committee and then referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and by the Committee on Naval Affairs reported. Will he allow that to come up as part of his business? I think it has at least a semi-title to his care.

Mr. SCOTT. If it leads to no debate, and the Senator will protect me from its being a precedent for similar demands from any other quarter, I will not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think no one will object, and I will endeavor to protect the Senator. The bill to which I refer is Senate bill No. 688.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 688) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Ada A. Andrews to the Court of Claims was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It refers the claim of the legal owner or owners of the schooner Ada A. Andrews, her cargo, freight, and personal effects, alleged to have been sunk by collision with the United States vessel of war Ticonderoga on or about the 1st day of May, 1871, to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the same to judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases; the suit to be brought within six months.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask if that bill has not been discussed in the morning hour once previously?

Mr. ANTHONY. No.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from South Carolina has in mind another case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GERMAN CHURCH AT MARTINSBURGH.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 709) for the relief of the German Evangelical church at Martinsburgh, West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Treasury by the bill is directed to pay to the trustees of the German Evangelical church at Martinsburgh, West Virginia, $2,500 on account of the destruction of their church building and its furniture on the 17th of February, 1863, while the same was in the possession of a portion of the military forces of the United States, and through their carelessness.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE MORRISON.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2348.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2348) for the relief of Rev. George Morrison, late of Kentucky. It provides for the payment to Rev. George Morrison, late of Kentucky, of $150 in full payment for one horse and equipments captured by the enemy during the late war while in the service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. M. AND S. A. DOUGLAS.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 669.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 669) referring the petition and papers in the case of Robert M. and Stephen A. Douglas, in so far as the same relates to cotton seized, (to the Court of Claims,) was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HIRAM W. LOVE.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 398.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Hiram W. Love was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the payment to Hiram W. Love of $5,000, in full of all claim and demand against the United States for damages growing out of the destruction, by the military forces of the United States in 1864, of a crop of cotton growing on the following-described premises: All the tillable land contained in a tract bounded by a line drawn from the naval station at the mouth of White River to the Arkansas River cut-off; thence to the mouth of the cut-off at White River; thence down White River to the Mississippi; thence down the Mississippi River to the naval station, lying and being in the county of Desha, and State of Arkansas; said tract being more particularly known as the Old Field at the Cumbey monument; which premises were held and occupied by Love, under a lease from the United States, by William P. Mellen, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department, made in pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury and orders of the Secretary of War in regard to the leasing of abandoned houses, tenements, and lands in States declared in insurrection; which lease is dated the 8th of March, 1864.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the Senators present to this bill. I propose an amendment to the bill to increase the amount allowed from $5,000 to $20,000. That is the amendment that I now offer to the bill—to strike out "5" and insert "20." That being the question before the Senate, I ask the indulgence of the body while I give for a very short time the reasons that influence me in making this motion.

It is not usual, so far as I am concerned, to differ from any amount that may be found by the Committee on Claims in favor of any claimant, and especially to think that the amount should be larger. But in this case I have such a firm conviction that the amount allowed this man is inadequate that I make this motion; and I think I can satisfy any member of the Senate that there should be a larger amount allowed. This may be regarded as a very small matter by us, but it is a matter of vital importance so far as this claimant is concerned.

Major Love went into the service of the United States, having left his business in my State in perfect health. After being in the service for some time his health failed him and he retired home. He then, under the rules of the Department and the legislation of Congress allowing him to go upon abandoned lands, went to this spot and obtained a lease from the Governmentand put in near one hundred acres of cotton. What I state will be verified by the report that was made by Mr. Willey, a member of the committee when this case was before the Senate heretofore, and I think will not be disputed by any member of the present committee. He went on this tract of land and put in about one hundred acres of cotton under this lease. That cotton was growing nicely and was almost to the point of being ready to pick. While it was in that condition, and when but a few days before he had been offered, as I remember, from thirty-five to forty thousand dollars for the cotton as it then stood, and he asking a few days to consider of it before he should give an answer to the proposition, he returned to his home (being in Memphis or Vicksburgh at the time the offer was made) to find that an officer of the United States Army, with a large force of Union soldiers, had come into that locality, and finding, as he says himself from his certificate, no proper or convenient place to locate his troops or to encamp, he went upon the field of cotton, put all his troops thereon, and the cotton was lost entirely to Major Love, so that, as I now remember, there was not saved to him more than one or two hundred dollars' worth.

There is no question about his contract of lease; there is no question about the destruction of the cotton. The testimony is that that cotton would have yielded over one bale to the acre, some of the witnesses putting it as high as two bales, it being an admirable quality of cotton for that region, and cotton was worth at that time an extraordinary price, as the testimony tends to show, over one dollar per pound. We all remember how very high cotton was at one time. Now he establishes that the expense of getting that cotton to its then condition was over $20,000. I insist that the true measure of damages to Major Love was what that cotton was worth to him at the time of its destruction, and not what it cost him to bring it to its then state. If he was allowed compensation under this rule—and no lawyer will certainly pretend that any other rule is justly or fairly applicable in such a case—then he would be entitled to a much larger amount than the sum actually expended in getting the cotton to its then condition; and if I went upon that rule of damages, I should make the sum, instead of $20,000, very much larger than that. But the committee having agreed upon $5,000, I propose $20,000, which I think is very much below what Mr. Love is entitled to in the way of compensation.

Now, Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary to read the report of Mr. Willey, made when this question was before the Senate heretofore, that the Senate may see exactly the report that was then made and the ground upon which action was then postponed. Before it is read, however, I wish to make this further remark: Senator Willey finds by that report that the cotton was worth a very large sum of money; but he concludes that the true measure of damages is what it cost the owner of the cotton to put it in and cultivate it up to that point. I do not think any one will claim in justice that that is the true rule of damages, for certainly I need not say that if this cotton had cost Major Love $50,000 and was only worth $25,000, no man would think of allowing him $50,000, what it cost, but what it was worth to him; and so the rule is equally true that if it cost him $20,000 and was worth $30,000, he should have the latter sum. In the case of the destruction of a house, if the house cost $5,000 and was worth $10,000, or if it cost $10,000 and was worth but $5,000, the rule of damages would be what was the property worth at the time of its destruction. But inasmuch as there was no testimony showing what it cost up to that time, and that being the rule of damages as he insists, he reports adversely to the claim at that time. Since then the proof has been supplied showing what it cost to put the cotton in the condition that it then was. Now, I ask that that report may be read that the Senate may see exactly the condition of this claim and upon what grounds it was that Mayor Love went there, the inducements that were held out to him by the Government, and the contract that he had.

Mr. BOREMAN. I suggest that the last report be read. It contains the report heretofore made by Mr. Willey and the report of the committee at this session, so that we shall get both by reading the report as made at this session.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no objection. I expect the report to be read, most certainly. I asked for the reading of Mr. Willey's report at the present time, and then the other can be read.

Mr. BOREMAN. The last report contains Mr. Willey's.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then that is the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. BOREMAN on the 30th of January:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hiram W. Love, praying reparation for damages sustained by him in the destruction of his cotton crop by the United States Army during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, respectfully submit the following report:

It appears that the papers in this case were presented in the Senate at the first session of the Forty-first Congress, and were then referred to this committee, and, on the 9th of April, 1870, the committee made a written report thereon; which is as follows:

"On the 8th day of March, 1864, the petitioner made the following agreement with William P. Mellen, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department, to wit:

"'LEASE.

"'This agreement, made this 8th day of March, 1864, by and between the United States of America, by William P. Mellen, supervising special agent of the Treasury Department, in the first agency, and Hiram W. Love, of Iowa City, Johnson County, in the State of Iowa, witnesseth that, in pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and of orders of the Secretary of War, concerning the leasing of abandoned houses, tenements, and lands in States declared in insurrection, the said agent, for and in behalf of the United States, agrees, upon the terms hereinafter contained, to lease to the said Hiram W. Love, from the date hereof to the 1st day of January, 1865, the following-described lands and premises, namely: lying and being in the county of Desha, and State of Arkansas, all the tillable land contained in a tract bounded by a line drawn from the naval station at the mouth of White River to the Arkansas River cut-off; thence to the mouth of the cut-off at White River; thence down White River to the Mississippi; thence down the Mississippi River to the naval station. Said tract is more particularly known as the Old Field at the Cumby monument, and said to contain fifty acres of land, more or less.

"'The said Hiram W. Love, having taken and filed the prescribed oath hereunto annexed, hereby agrees to pay to the said agent, as rent for the above-described lands and premises, one cent per pound on all cotton, and a proportionate sum upon all other products raised by him; which payment shall be made as provided for and in pursuance of the rules and regulations for leasing abandoned plantations and employing freedmen, hereunto annexed; and in all cases where freed labor is employed, the said Hiram W. Love further agrees to contribute or pay to the said agent the sum of one cent per pound on all cotton, and a proportionate sum upon all other products grown on said premises, for the purposes set forth in section 5 of said rules and regulations.

"'And the said Hiram W. Love further agrees that during the continuance of this lease he will keep employed one No. 1 man, or the equivalent thereto in men, women, or children, as classified in said rules, for each twelve acres of tillable land occupied by him under this lease, it being hereby agreed that said premises contain fifty acres, and require four No. 1 hands, or their equivalent in other grades.

"'And the said lessee further agrees to furnish to the persons employed suitable tenements, with separate quarters for families who may desire the same; and that to each family of four or more persons he will set apart, for their sole use and benefit, not less than one acre of ground suitable for garden purposes, and fuel sufficient for the use and comfort of each family, all of which shall be without charge to such persons or the Government.

"'Said lessee hereby further agrees that no freed person shall be employed on the said premises except under contract made with such person; and no contract for freed labor shall be valid without the sanction of the superintendent of the Freedmen's Home Farm, who shall in each case designate the proportion of each grade or sex to be employed.

"'Said lessee further agrees to pay to each freed person, so employed, according to the terms set out and established in section 10 of the said rules and regulations.

"'Said lessee further agrees to pay at least one-half the amount of the monthly wages during each and every month, said payment to be in cash, food, clothing, or other necessaries, at the option of the laborer; all food, clothing, or other articles so furnished to be of good quality, and not to be charged at more than 10 per cent. advance on wholesale invoice prices at Saint Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, or Louisville.

"'It is further agreed that the parties to this contract shall be subject to the observance of the rules and regulations hereto subjoined.

[SEAL.] "'H. W. LOVE.
[SEAL.] "'WILLIAM P. MELLEN,
"'Per T. C. CALLICOTT,
"'Assistant Special Agent Treasury Department.'"

"By virtue of said agreement the petitioner entered upon said lands in the month of April, 1864, which, upon actual survey, were found to contain 88.28 acres; and also upon a smaller lot, containing from six to ten acres, situate about one-fourth of a mile from said larger tract. It appears that said petitioner did plant cotton in both of said parcels of land, and by his proper care and attention the cotton thereon promised a good and productive crop, and that said crop had so far matured as to be ready for picking, and the petitioner had made his arrangements for picking the same, when, on the 8th day of September, 1864, Brigadier-General Dennis, commanding some fifteen thousand United States troops, arrived with said forces at the mouth of White River, and, after examining the vicinity to select a proper place of encampment for said forces, issued the following order:

"'[Special Orders No. 19.]

"'HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
"'Mouth of White River, Arkansas, September 8, 1864.

"'3. There being no ground in this vicinity suitable for an encampment, excepting this field of growing cotton, claimed as private property by Major Hiram W. Love, the troops of this command will at once disembark and go into camp on this aforesaid field, the same being necessary for military purposes.

"'By order of Brigadier-General E. S. Dennis:

"'WILLIAM E. KUHN,
"'Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

"'I certify on honor that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original order, as appears upon records on file in this office.

"'WILLIAM E. KUHN,
"'Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.'"

"By virtue of said order the said forces were disembarked and encamped on the said larger field of cotton, notwithstanding the remonstrances of the petitioner through his authorized agents.

"The result was that the cotton on the said field of eighty-eight acres was principally destroyed. One of the witnesses, substantially sustained by many others, testifies that, 'immediately upon occupying said land, the troops went to work and pulled up the cotton-plants to clear the ground for camping purposes, and scattered it around in piles so as to be out of their way, and trampled upon and beat it down with wagons, horses, and artillery; that in a short time the whole crop of cotton growing on said parcel of land, containing about ninety acres, was wholly destroyed and rendered worthless and of no value, and was wholly lost to said Love, except in this, a small amount of cotton was picked from the scattering stocks and from the piles of stocks pulled up by the troops; but the amount thus obtained was very small and of little value; that, in truth and in fact, the entire crop of cotton growing on said parcel of land, containing about ninety acres, was substantially wholly and entirely destroyed, and rendered worthless and of no value; and that the said Love, by reason of the occupancy of said parcel of land by said troops of the United States, as above stated, was injured and damaged to the full value of the cotton crop growing thereon in its then condition.'

"The actual amount secured as 'picked from the scattering stocks and from the piles pulled up by the troops' was 3,896 pounds.

"The claimant has filed the affidavits of many witnesses, of evident intelligence and good moral character, in relation to the amount of cotton which the said 88 acres would have produced if he had been suffered to pick and bale it; several of whom were persons who had experience and skill in raising cotton.

"Their estimates are as follows:

"Eli Nellums, one and three-fourths bales of ginned cotton, of 500 pounds to the bale, per acre.

"Jacob Graham, the same.

"George W. Moorehead, an aggregate of 200 bales of 500 pounds each.

"John A. Hugus, one and a half to two bales per acre of 500 pounds.

"Marion W. Magill, the same.

"Thomas E. Dugan, from one and three-fourths to two bales of 500 pounds to the acre.

"The value of cotton at that time, according to the proof, was $1.75 per pound, delivered on the bank of the river.

"The highest estimate of cost for ginning and baling is $3 per bale; and at the price of $1.75 per pound, there would have been a profit on the bagging and rope necessary to bale the cotton.

"Thus stands the case on the proof before the committee. Estimating the crop of cotton on the said eighty-eight acres at one and three-fourths bales per acre, the aggregate to be 154 bales of 500 pounds each, making 77,000 pounds of cotton, which, valued at $1.75 per pound, would make the sum of $134,750

Deducting 3,896 pounds saved	$6,118
And the ginning and baling	462
Would leave a balance of		128,170

Such is the result of the evidence in this case, looking to the value of claimant's cotton crop, if he had been allowed to pick, gin, and sell it. It is palpable that this result, based wholly on ex parte affidavits, is unreliable and extravagant. But a majority of the committee are of opinion that no relief should be granted to the claimant on this basis; that Congress should not undertake to ascertain and pay for the speculative advantages which he might have derived from his contract if he had not been interrupted in its execution; but that he should be indemnified for his actual expenses in preparing the ground and planting and cultivating the cotton, including a reasonable compensation for his own time and labor bestowed thereon.

"Waiving the question of the Government's liability for the net profits which the claimant would have realized if he had been permitted to pick, gin, and sell his cotton, the committee all agree that he should be indemnified for his actual expenses. The evidence shows that the claimant in good faith, under authority of law, rented the land aforesaid from the supervising agent of the Treasury, and planted the same with cotton, and cultivated it, according to the stipulations of the contract, until he was forcibly ejected from the premises by the military order aforesaid, and his crops destroyed by the troops of the United States encamped thereon by regular competent military authority. Certainly, th e claimant should be indemnified to the extent of his actual expenses incurred in the faithful execution of a contract with the Government, which the Government, by its own officers, forcibly prevented him from fully executing, and from which, if he had been permitted fully to enjoy the benefits of it, he would, beyond all question, have realized a large amount of net profits over and above his expenditures.

"But the claimant, proceeding upon the hypothesis that the measure of the Government's liability was the net profits which he would have made if he had not been ejected from the premises, and his crop destroyed as aforesaid, has furnished no evidence of his actual expenses in planting and cultivating his crop, upon which the committee could make any reliable estimate thereof.

"The committee, therefore, report back the papers to the Senate, and recommend that the claimant have leave to withdraw them, and to take evidence of said expenses, if he sees proper to do so, with a view to a future application for relief in that behalf."

Your committee further state that they concur in the foregoing statement of the history and facts of claimant's case, except that they think that the estimate therein of the amount of cotton that would have been gathered from the eighty-eight acres of land is extravagant, and the price per pound therein fixed more than it would have sold for.

Your committee further state that, since the making of the foregoing report of April 9, 1870, the claimant has filed an account of his actual expenditures in this behalf, accompanied by his own affidavit and some additional evidence. In his said affidavit he says:

"That deponent's books, containing an account of the moneys expended by him in raising a crop of cotton in the year 1864, on certain lands leased by him from the Government of the United States, situated at the mouth of White River, in the State of Arkansas, (which crop of cotton was destroyed by the military forces of the United States in September, 1864, by camping thereon,) were destroyed by fire on a steamboat on the Mississippi River in the year 1865, so that he cannot make out a full and complete account of all moneys expended by him in the planting and cultivation of said crop of cotton, but that the following statement, made up from memoranda and receipts now in his possession and from memory, is as full and accurate an account of such expenditures and expenses in raising the said crop of cotton as he is now able to give; and that the same is true and correct according to the best of his knowledge and belief."

In the account accompanying said affidavit is set forth in detail the several items of expense incurred by claimant in clearing off the land; in providing materials and implements; in paying for labor; and generally in planting, cultivating, and raising the crop of cotton which was destroyed as above set forth. The items of expense charged in said account amount in the aggregate to the sum of $24,341.75. This transaction, it will be recollected, was in the year 1864, when three dollars in the currency of the times (United States notes) were worth a little more than one dollar in gold. These charges are no doubt made with reference to the paper currency of the time. Yet, notwithstanding the depreciated condition of the currency at that date, your committee look upon them as exorbitant; and while admitting that it is clearly shown from the amount of work done, materials furnished, &c., that claimant must have expended considerable sums of money in preparing for and cultivating his crop of cotton, the committee nevertheless think that a much less sum than that claimed will cover his actual expenses; and in this view they have made an estimate, imperfect it may be, of such actual expenses in this behalf, and have determined to recommend, and do recommend, that he be allowed the sum of $5,000, in full of all claim and demand against the United States on account of the matters set forth and complained of in complainant's petition; and to this end the committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend that the same do pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

Mr. WRIGHT. Now that the report has been read, I think I am warranted in saying that every statement I made in reference to this case in substance is sustained by the finding of the committee. It is true they say in the closing up of their report that they think the estimate of the expenses incurred by this person in preparing this cotton is extravagant; but let it be ever so extravagant, I do not see how it is possible that they can find the sum of $5,000, and no more, to be due. It seems to me, if you take that basis, it must be very clear that $5,000 is a very inadequate compensation.

I insist upon it that if we look at this question as one of right as between the citizen and the Government, the true rule of damages is that this person should be compensated for what was his loss; in other words, what that property was worth at that time. I concede that it is proper to take into account in reaching such a conclusion the then condition of the cotton, the possible contingencies subsequent to that time, the possible injuries that it might have received from frost or otherwise; but you can reach a fair conclusion, as a jury would if they were estimating this question as between individuals. If an individual had destroyed this property under the same circumstances and this claimant had brought his action, the jury would be compelled under the instructions of the court to find what the property was then worth, just exactly as they would if there had been a destruction of a field of corn or a field of wheat, taking into consideration such contingencies as might possibly arise subsequently to destroy that property to the individual.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Senator whether there is any equity in this case that would not exist if the claimant had been the owner of the land?

Mr. WRIGHT. As against him?

Mr. CONKLING. No. I think there is some the other way; but is there any equity in favor of the claimant which there would not be had he been the owner of the property in fee?

Mr. WRIGHT. I should say not. I do not know that there would be; but there is this fact, he was there under a contract with the Government; the Government had undertaken to protect him in his rights to that land; and whether there was an agreement expressed or not he should be protected, for of course the landlord was bound to protect him in that property; that is to say, the landlord could not be justified upon any ground whatever in himself going there and destroying that property. This man was thus in possession of this land and had this property, and it was destroyed by the order of one of the military officers of the Government, and entirely lost to him.

The testimony here shows the amount expended by this claimant, the amount of his losses. I know how exceedingly difficult it is to get the amount appropriated in a bill increased beyond what has been found by the committee; but this is such a glaring case of injustice to this man, that I feel justified in insisting on the sum that I have named. The effect of the action on the part of the Government was to strip him of everything he had. They took this property, which was to him his all, property for which he was offered a few days before, as I remember the testimony, about $35,000. Now I ask that he shall be allowed $20,000. Perhaps I might say I can scarcely hope, in view of the action of the Senate heretofore in following committees, to get this sum increased, and if it was an ordinary case I should not insist upon it; but I have such a firm conviction that this man is injured by this report and that he ought to have a larger sum, that I feel it my duty to insist upon the amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows what it is worth to cultivate an acre of land in cotton—if he knows what it costs generally?

Mr. WRIGHT. I know nothing about it in the world; but I take the record as I find it here as to what were the expenses in connection with this particular piece of ground and this particular lot of cotton. That is what governs me, and that alone.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I noticed from the reading of the report that Mr. Love had leased about a hundred acres of land from the Government and cultivated it in cotton, and early in September, 1864—I think early in September—the military authorities took possession of the land for a camping ground and destroyed the crop of cotton. That I think entitles him to compensation for his losses; but how much were his losses? That is a thing for the Senate to inquire into; and my impression is that $5,000, as reported by the committee, will amply cover all his losses, unless he had a very large amount of stock on his plantation which was lost also, and I take it that was not lost.

Now, Mr. President, a crop of cotton is not made in the beginning of September; it is beginning to be made, but it may be almost destroyed by the worm between that and the frost. It may be cut off one-half, and very often is; or by floods, by successive rains, rainy, cloudy weather, &c., the cotton will rot. But at the very best, allowing that he made his whole crop, he had not gathered a pound of it, and it costs as much to gather a crop of cotton as it does to make it, and more too. The making, plowing, hoeing, and cultivating are not one-half the work in preparing a crop of cotton for the market.

Then, again, the Senator from Iowa assumes that this land would have made from one to two bales of cotton to the acre. Mr. President, I have lived in a cotton country all my life and noticed these things pretty closely, and I say there are very few plantations that will turn out a bale of cotton to the acre. Not one in a thousand, not one in ten thousand I undertake to say, if you go all over the United States, will make a bale of cotton to the acre. Generally it is considered a first-rate crop if you make half a bale to the acre. In the best Red River lands and Mississippi lands three-quarters of a bale to the acre is a fine crop.

Now, allowing that Mr. Love would have made seventy-five bales of cotton on his one hundred acres of land, he had not gathered a pound of it, and the gathering is one-half of the labor. That would reduce his crop to thirty-seven bales; and at forty cents a pound, which is all it was worth in sound funds at that time, it would have netted him after he had got it to market about $7,500, and that would have paid him very well for cultivating one hundred acres of land. Five thousand dollars, as the committee propose to pay him, is fifty dollars an acre for cultivating his one hundred acres of land, which I say is a first-rate price. It is a very large price. There are hundreds of planters in the South who will undertake to cultivate all the lands you give them at fifty dollars an acre and cultivate them in cotton, and turn the crop over when it is finished, and would be very glad to do that sort of work and do no more. I think myself the report of the committee ought to be supported.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President, as to many of the facts in regard to this matter there is no dispute. The report is plain, and it seems to me it cannot be misunderstood in regard to the main facts.

It appears that in the spring of 1864, as has been stated, under the laws in regard to captured and abandoned property, the agent of the Government leased to this gentleman, Mr. Love, a tract of land at the mouth of White River, in Arkansas, which was supposed to contain about fifty acres, but upon survey it was shown to contain eighty-eight acres. In pursuance of that contract Mr. Love proceeded to clear off the ground and plant it in cotton. The crop was grown and about ready to be gathered, when on the 8th of September in that year General Dennis, with twenty thousand troops, landed from boats and occupied the premises and destroyed the cotton. It was a temporary occupancy. The general certifies, as has been read from the report, that there was no other ground in the vicinity suitable for an encampment, and therefore he occupied it. The crop was destroyed, as I remarked, and the evidence before the committee, which was all ex parte, is given in the report. Four, five, or probably half a dozen, witnesses testified that the ground would produce one and three-quarters bales of cotton to the acre, and they give an estimate of the value of that cotton, which they place at $1.75 per pound. The committee, even if they had seen fit to go into the question as to whether Mr. Love was to be paid for his cotton or not, came to the conclusion that this was a very extravagant price; that the amount of cotton per acre was more than is ordinarily produced; that it was an extraordinary crop if one and three-quarters bales to the acre were raised upon the land.

But, sir, in the view that the committee took of this question they determined that the Government was not bound to pay Mr. Love for the cotton destroyed; that it was one of those injuries which result from the condition of war, which are without remedy so far as the property destroyed is concerned; that, notwithstanding the lease on the part of the Government, he took that lease knowing the circumstances; that there was no guarantee in the lease of protection; and the committee I apprehend did not conclude that there was even an implied guarantee of protection on the part of the Government, except such as is extended to all its citizens; that this was a mere permission, for which this gentleman agreed to pay the Government, as set forth in his contract, a very small return, which was to go to the support of the freedmen in the Government's care and protection over those unfortunate people at that time. The committee said the Government could not afford to pay for the value of this cotton; that its value if it had been gathered was estimated, but its value growing was not proven. There is no evidence in these papers to show what it would have cost to gather this crop. That is a defect in the testimony which of course the committee could not supply. There was no evidence in the case to show what the cotton was worth precisely as it was growing; and to have undertaken to pay this gentleman for a growing crop the amount that it might have been sold for in the event that it had been gathered, baled, and transported to market, was coming within the rule of what the committee state here to be speculative damages, prospective damages; what might or might not have been the damages sustained by this party.

The committee, upon a rule which they have adopted for their guidance in the determination of cases of this character, would not go into that question at all. They put that aside, and determined that the rule for the guidance of the committee, and by which the Government has usually been controlled, was the actual expenditure of the party and the outlay by him in money in the cultivation of his crop; that the Government cannot afford to pay a party for crops that he might have made if he had been allowed to proceed and complete his work. The Government cannot afford to pay persons what they might have made had they been allowed to perfect their engagements; but the Government will try to make its citizens whole for money which they have actually expended and which has been taken away from them by the action of the Government or its agents.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask a question right there?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose the testimony in this case established beyond all question so that there was no room for doubt left upon it, and the Senator reached the conclusion without any hesitation, that this cotton cost this man $30,000 at the time it was destroyed, in the work that he had undertaken, but it was worth really only $10,000; what would be the rule of damages in his estimate?

Mr. BOREMAN. It is unnecessary to answer that question, I apprehend, in this case. The committee determined, as I have remarked, as their rule of action, not simply in this case, but it has controlled them in regard to all claims of this character which have come before them, to try and make claimants whole where the action of the Government or its agents has damaged or injured them. This being the view and the rule which the committee have adopted for their action, the next question was to ascertain what had been the expenditures of this gentleman in the cultivation of his cotton. When the case was first considered by the committee in 1870 there was no evidence on file to show how much money he had expended, and the report was adverse on that ground. Since that he has had time to file such testimony as he could get to show how much money he had actually expended in the planting and cultivation of this crop. The only testitimony which he has filed is his own affidavit, as referred to in the report, in which he states that his books and papers were destroyed on a steamboat, I believe by fire, and he makes out his account no doubt from memory. He has no witnesses by whom he can prove these expenditures, but he states upon his own oath and from his own memory as well as he can the amount he has expended. The account is not incorporated into the report. It is a long document. Here it is, [exhibiting a manuscript] as furnished by himself. His expenditures in the cultivation of eighty-eight acres of cotton he estimates, and indeed states upon oath, amount to the sum of $24,341.75. He gives the items. Now, sir, a rough estimate will show that according to his statement here, if we were to pay him his claim, it cost him over $200 per acre to plant and cultivate this crop of cotton. The committee have allowed him some sixty dollars per acre as the amount they estimated would be sufficient to repay him the amount he should have expended.

Mr. PRATT. Will my friend from West Virginia read some of the items in that account in which Mr. Love figures up $24,341 as his expenses in cultivating eighty-eight acres of cotton land?

Mr. BOREMAN. The first item is:

Clearing off and preparing for cultivation thirty-five acres of land, at an expense of $30 per acre	$1,050 00
Use of ten mules in cultivating crop, 8 months, at $26 per month	2,080 00
Transportation of mules from Memphis, at $10 per head	100 00
Transportation of rations and forage	400 00
Wages of one man, eight months, at $150 per month	1,200 00
Wages of one man, eight months, at $125 per month	1,000 00
Wages of one man, eight months, at $100 per month	800 00
My own time, twelve months, $300 per month	3,600 00

Mr. PRATT. I will not ask my friend to read any further. I only wanted a sample of the account.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President, my sympathy for this gentleman under the circumstances is such that I am not here to oppose an increase of the amount fixed by the committee in their report, and yet I have felt it my duty to refer to the facts in order that the Senate might be advised of the facts upon which the committee made up their opinion, so that they may understand how it was that we arrived at this conclusion. It will be seen that the committee have taken this account and looked it over and come to an estimate, because the figures fixed by the committee of course are not those given by any witness nor by the party himself. In looking over the ground and examining the facts the committee came to the conclusion that $5,000, or sixty dollars an acre, would repay the claimant for all the moneys that he should have expended in the cultivation of this crop.

Upon this state of the case I have no argument to make. If the Senate see fit to increase the sum that is set forth in the report, and recommended by the committee to be allowed, I shall be content. As I have remarked, my sympathy for this gentleman under the circumstances is such that I am not here to make an argument even against the allowance of a larger sum of money to him. I think, however, that the sum named in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is more than should be allowed by this body. My own judgment is incorporated in the report, but I think the allowance of $20,000, as proposed by the amendment, would be entirely too great and exorbitant for the raising of this crop.

I will state further as a fact that as far as I was concerned I was not controlled entirely by the evidence in the case. The statements of this gentleman who came before us in regard to this matter were such as to excite my sympathy, and I inquired of members of the Senate and of members of the House who have been in the habit of cultivating cotton to see if we could not increase the sum that is fixed by the committee in their report, and I regret to say that from conversations with the gentlemen to whom I refer, and whose information I requested in regard to this matter, I was compelled to come to the conclusion ultimately that the committee were very nearly right. There are some of those gentlemen here, members of this body, who are planters, who have now the facts before them. Here is this claimant's account. They can look over it, and they can state to the Senate how reasonable it is; and I think their information and knowledge on this subject given to the Senate ought to have great weight in aiding us to come to a correct conclusion. But I wish to repeat that I shall be content if the Senate see fit to increase the amount that is set forth in the report.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BOREMAN] made this report, and is more familiar with the details than I am. But there is a general view of this case which I deem it my duty to present to the Senate.

So far as this claimant is concerned, I am informed that he is a very deserving and worthy gentleman, and I regret that my sense of public duty compels me to oppose the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Iowa and to support the report of the committee, which I do upon grounds entirely of public policy in this case, and I may say that it is because it is a case of such exceeding hardship that I am enabled to vote for a report allowing damages in this case at all. It is the case of, I will not say a temporary occupation of private property by the United States troops, but certainly of a not very prolonged occupation. It was not a destruction upon a march. It was not pillage by private soldiers. It was a deliberate occupation by order of a commanding officer and the occupation of this particular property, because there was none other in the neighborhood adapted to the purpose of encamping his troops. We can hardly suppose that an officer of the United States Army fit to be intrusted with the command of men would order his troops to encamp in a growing field of cotton almost ready to be picked, and have it utterly destroyed, unless he were driven to it by such circumstances as left him no other resort.

He did this; and under what circumstances? It was not the property of an owner resident there, and who had been resident there for many years. Mr. Love was a citizen of Iowa, as we learn from the agreement into which he entered. He went from Iowa to the State of Arkansas, and took a lease of captured and abandoned property for the purpose of raising cotton. Eighty-eight acres were leased to him, and he promised to pay the Government one cent per pound upon the cotton raised upon that property. He presents a bill which shows that the cotton raised upon eighty-eight acres would have been worth to him $128,000. The statement itself I confess is not calculated to add to the equity of the claim, for it makes the product of that land worth about $1,500 per acre. Of course it is proper to say that it might be subject to the deduction suggested by the Senator from Texas, the cost of picking the cotton, which he says would be one-half; but even that would reduce it down to over $60,000, which would be his demand if he had made that deduction.

Now, the ground upon which the committee placed the report was that the Government did not stand in the relation of a lessor who would be bound by his implied covenant, if it were not expressed, for the quiet enjoyment of his lessee. Mr. Love went there knowing that he was going into a probable theater of war; and he took the risks of occupation by United States troops to some extent like any other owner, and even of loss or devastation by the enemy, in which event of course he would have been a sufferer without the right of compensation. The Government then being driven by stress of necessity to occupy his property, when his case comes before Congress, the committee looking at the hardship of the case takes it out of what perhaps would be the general rule, that it was one of the misfortunes of war caused by the march of the troops through that particular region or their disembarkation from the river at that particular spot, and in consideration of the hardship have agreed to allow him $5,000.

Mr. President, that is the whole case. I do not think that the Senator from Iowa himself will say that if he had been a resident, if he had been the owner in fee-simple of the soil, and the troops of the United States in their march had traveled across his field and trodden down every particle of his growing cotton, he would have had a claim which legally he could have established against the Government of the United States. It would be one of the casualties of war which, however hard they may be to endure, usage has established that governments either cannot or will not pay it until some other rule shall be established. But he was there as the lessee of the Government; the Government did occupy his property; and he did lose the whole profits of his venture, and also all the money that he had expended in putting this cotton there.

What have the committee done? They have endeavored to ascertain not what the cotton would be worth if it had been gathered, not what his speculative profits would have been, but to ascertain how much money he actually spent in getting the crop there on the ground. He says his vouchers are lost; they have been burnt. A gentleman who examined the case technically but closely says he thinks $5,000 will compensate him for the property invested; and I think, while I may regret that we are not able to give him more, that this claimant should be well contented with getting the $5,000 which the committee have awarded him; and I trust that will be the sense of the Senate.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, I am certainly not one of those who would oppose the payment by the Government of any proper compensation in cases of this character; but the case at bar bears upon its face such palpable evidences of fraud, that I do not feel justified in sitting in my seat and permitting this bill to pass.

I know something of cotton-raising. The Senator from Texas, when he estimates the crop of the Mississippi alluviums at less than a bale to the acre, does not I think do justice to the capacity of those lands for production. It is true that the alluviums of the Mississippi will produce a full bale of cotton to the acre when well cultivated. Very little of that sort of cultivation is had, however.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask him what the annual report of the cotton crop of the South in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana shows?

Mr. ALCORN. Only about half a bale to the acre, taking the two; but that report embraces a large portion of very sterile lands, and the average is taken. In the alluviums of the Mississippi I say a bale of cotton to the acre can be very well produced. I do not think, however, the crops in that district average a bale to the acre, for the reason that there is a great loss in the gathering always. I do not suppose the average is up to a bale to the acre; but that that land will produce a bale and in some cases as much as two bales to the acre there is no question. But in this case, on the 8th of September, 1864, an encampment was made on land occupied by a party who had rented it from Callicott, an agent of the Government. That agent of the Government was there for the purpose of speculating; he was there to take charge of the abandoned lands; and the Government declared those lands abandoned from which the people had been driven. That agent does not bear a very favorable record in the history of the war, for I believe he was subsequently put in the penitentiary for his swindling and for his robbery, and served his time there on account of the infamous proceedings that he inaugurated while he was in the discharge of his duty as a representative of the Government. I had the honor to have an acquaintance with Mr. Callicott, and I also know something of the gentleman who makes this demand against the Government. Of him, however, I know nothing to his discredit. He looks like, and appears to be, a very good clever sort of man, but he does make out an account here against the Government that shows a fraud upon its face. The question is, will the Government pay this party for and on account of what may be conceived to be consequential damages. I apprehend that the Government will not commit itself to paying for consequential damages. If he is not to be paid consequential damages, then shall he have the damages that actually occurred at the time? There is no way of estimating those damages; and we fall back necessarily in arriving at something like the equity of this case on an estimate of the expenses to which this party would have been subjected in cultivating these eighty acres of ground.

Now, how many laborers will it take to cultivate eighty acres of ground? I undertake to say here that eight hands can cultivate eighty acres of ground, and cause that land, if industry is used, to produce the maximum of its capacity. Eight hands are all-sufficient. Eight hands, then, at twenty-five dollars a month for the whole year would give a result of $2,400. Five mules certainly would be sufficient. This man puts their use at twenty-six dollars each. That is low enough; it is too low.

Mr. BOREMAN. Twenty-six dollars a month.

Mr. ALCORN. A month! That is more than a mule is worth. I thought it was that for a year. I put down five mules at fifty dollars for the year. That is a large estimate. Forty dollars is the usual price for the use of a mule for a year, but I will put it at fifty dollars That is $250. He charges for one overseer $1,800 a year, and for another overseer $1,500 a year, and another overseer $100 a month —three overseers for eight darkies—and for himself as a supervisor and general controller of the concern. This was the most expensive eighty-eight acres of land that I have known to be cultivated in that district of country in which I live, and this region lies contiguous to that in which I live. I would give him one overseer for eight darkies, and I should say that would be a pretty high price. I would allow $1,250 for that overseer. I would give him then provisions for eight hands, and put them at twice as much as they are worth. That item I would put down at $400. I would give him then provisions for the five mules, and put them twice as much as they are worth, and would put that down at $250. Then I would give for contingencies four times the amount that it was necessary for him to expend, and put that down at $500. I put down then his expenses at the outside limit at $4,650, and that I will venture to say in the presence of his statement and meeting his statement, is more than he expended. There cannot be a doubt about it. This account of his is fabulous.

When he went upon this land he went there with the knowledge that that country was raided upon by the confederate troops periodically. He went there with the knowledge that the owner of that land had been driven from it by the presence of the Federal troops. He went there, I say, with this knowledge. Certainly all the facts that the case embraces were understood by him. He took the risks. He agreed to give to the Government one cent a pound for rent on the cotton.

Mr. BOREMAN. Two cents. There is one cent mentioned in two different places in the contract, and I think it amounts to two cents.

Mr. ALCORN. One cent a pound would be about five dollars an acre or say ten dollars an acre.

Mr. CONKLING. Five dollars a bale, it is said.

Mr. ALCORN. He estimated it at $1.75 I believe. The price to be paid to the Government shows very well that the land was not in very great demand. It shows upon its face that he took the risks, and that he went there to cultivate a precarious estate held in a precarious way. He went there upon a speculation. While I would not intimate or insinuate or have any one to understand that I am casting any reflection either upon this claimant or upon the officer who could find no other ground to camp on than this field, I venture to suggest that the tenant of this land at the time the troops encamped there did not shed very many tears over the disaster; he preferred to make his claim against the Government to going forward to gather the crop.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator how does he find that this particular spot had been raided upon before? I do not doubt the fact, but I am not familiar with the papers.

Mr. ALCORN. I have not said that this particular spot had been raided upon.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not mean the particular eighty acres; but I mean the general locality. Does it appear from the papers before us that that was so; or does the Senator know it?

Mr. ALCORN. It was within the confederate lines, which made it liable to confederate raids.

Mr. CONKLING. That is enough for my purpose.

Mr. ALCORN. The Government had not then, as I understand, at any time declared that region within the confederate lines; or if it had, it was a mere formal declaration; there was no garrison of troops there, as I understand, but in all that country on the Mississippi troops of both sides were continually coming to the river from the interior. As I said, this cotton was pulled up on the 8th day of September, 1864. At that time the cotton was fully matured. The picking commences in that country from the 10th to the 25th of August; and by the 8th day of September, if this man's crop were likely to produce anything, he should have had a very considerable amount of it gathered; but it appears that he had gathered none. The cotton at that time in that latitude was matured; and by the pulling of it up the boles that were not open would not have been injured unless they had been trampled upon and trodden into the earth. It is frequently the case when cotton is pulled up at that season of the year, if pulled up with any degree of care, that a valuable crop may be gathered. If it is fully matured, the product is ripening and the opening has already begun.

Mr. PRATT. At this point I should be glad to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. Major Love, the claimant in this case, laid his testimony before the committee; and in the affidavits he furnished he claims that he had the opportunity a short time before the Government troops encamped upon this ground of selling his crop ungathered, in the condition it was, for the sum of $35,000—the crop that was growing upon eighty-eight acres of ground. Now the question which I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi is whether that was a reasonable price, whether a sane man, having in view his own interest, would make such an offer as that?

Mr. ALCORN. I would doubt the good sense of a man who would have made any such proposition. If he had made a proposition like that, I should have said that he had somebody else's money or that he did not know how to manage his own—one of those two things. During the war, many highly speculative men visited that country. I know nothing about the proposition, and am not prepared to say that it was not made; but certainly I would have said that the man who made such an offer was a very speculative sort of an individual. He had somebody else's money, or he did not know how to manage his own—one of the two. I think the report of the committee is very liberal. I think it is more than it should be. That is my judgment; and I do think the friends of this claim ought to be content to take what the committee have given and say no more about it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If I know anything, Mr. President, I know something about the cultivation of cotton. I followed that business for years. I think this account—and it seems to be sworn to by the gentleman who presents the bill—is simply outrageous. I can call it nothing else. It is a fraud and a swindle; and yet it seems to be sworn to. I notice in the items "use of ten mules in cultivating crop eight months at twenty-six dollars a month, $2,080." That is enough to buy ten mules; and this is only for the use of them! Again, "transportation of mules from Memphis at ten dollars a head;" and then "for transportation of plows, cultivators, and other implements, $205." The account is simply outrageous. If the Senate is imposed upon so as to pass this bill, you need not expect to object successfully to fraud in the future. I do not wish to cast any imputation upon the motives of the committee; but I simply say that they have been imposed upon, probably because there were no cotton-planters on the committee. I see in this account the claimant charges for three overseers to cultivate this cotton, one at a salary of $150 a month, one $125 a month, and the other $100 a month, and for his own services $300 a month!

Mr. BOREMAN. The Senator from South Carolina was probably not in when the report was read. He may not be aware of the fact that the committee allowed but $5,000, and not the $25,000 claimed in the account.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I was not in when the report was read; but a man who will swear to this account I do not think is entitled to anything. Two thousand dollars would buy ten mules, and good mules at that; and I know how many mules it will take to cultivate eighty-eight acres of land. Four mules will cultivate eighty-eight acres of land and cultivate it well. It is not necessary to have more than four mules. Instead of having three overseers, it would not be necessary to have any overseer, or certainly not more than one. Instead of having ten hands, eight hands would be amply sufficient to cultivate the land.

It seems that this cotton was destroyed in September. The best part of the cotton should have been open by that time. It does not appear that any of this cotton was gathered at all. The statement in this account is simply outrageous. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from South Carolina moves the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, if we concede that this claimant should be paid for the actual expenses of putting in and cultivating this crop, acting upon that presumption I think the amount allowed by the committee is reasonable. It is about the same amount that my friend from Mississippi places it at, as being a fair estimate of what the expenses might be. It must be borne in mind that at that time it cost perhaps three or four times as much to carry on those operations as it does now. I myself have had considerable experience in the culture of cotton, and I think I know something about it. I do not think that, if we concede that we should pay the actual expenses incurred in the putting in and culture of this crop, the amount fixed by the committee is too great.

But the question arises, can we concede that? Did not this man take all the risks? His profits would have been very great probably if he had succeeded, because at that time cotton was very high. If he had succeeded, his profits would have been enormous in all probability. But did he not take all those risks when he went on to this precarious ground, this ground half-way between the two contending armies—one day occupied by the Federal forces and perhaps the next day likely to be occupied by the confederate forces? In my view of the case I have serious doubts as to whether the Government should pay at all for damages of this character; but if it should pay, then I think the amount fixed by the committee is perhaps not too great.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know anything about the raising of cotton, and therefore on that point shall say nothing; but this is a claim presented by a gentleman from Iowa to the Government for damages resulting to a crop of cotton which he had planted in the State of Arkansas. The claim is not addressed to the Senate as a legal claim upon the Government as I understand, because notwithstanding he rented the property from the agent of the Government having legal custody of abandoned property, there was no covenant that he should have protection; and therefore the claim is addressed to the equitable consideration of the Senate. In that view of it, regarding it merely as an equitable claim, I concur with the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas. I think it is very doubtful whether it has any equity when we take all the facts into consideration.

This was the property of some owner who had been driven from his plantation, who could not stay upon it, and therefore necessarily had abandoned it. Some agent of the Government took possession of that property, and this gentleman, with full knowledge of that fact, went from the State of Iowa down to that section of country and became a cultivator of that land.

The first question that arises in my mind is whether, as a proper, conscientious man, he could have entered on the property of another man in that way. Whether the Government claimed to have control of it as abandoned property or not, I ask whether he could enter upon my property and use my property for his benefit? Under any circumstances, whether it had been abandoned by the owner or not, had he any moral right, though the Government may have professed to give him the power, to enter on my farm and cultivate it for his own advantage without any reference to my interest whatever? This Mr. Love may have had no scruples on that point. For one I should think I would not be justified in entering and taking possession of the property of any man without his consent, without some reference to compensation to him for any damages to his property which I might occasion.

It is very evident that this Mr. Love went down South for the purpose of enriching himself; and it seems to me to be apparent that he went regardless of what injury he might do to the owner of that land. Then, having entered upon it as a mere speculation, though he may have leased it from some agent of the Government, I think with the Senator from Arkansas that he must abide by his contract. If it proved a profitable one, of course he pocketed the profits. If it proves a disadvantageous one and a loss to him, he ought to be left to abide by the loss. In that view of the case I cannot vote for this report of the committee even if I concede that the loss of Mr. Love had been the full amount reported by the committee. I cannot vote for it because I believe the loss properly falls on him and ought not to fall on this Government. Therefore, as a Senator on this floor, having to a certain extent the custody of the funds of the Government, I cannot consent to open the Treasury of the country to pay this gentleman for an enterprise which has not been a very profitable one to him.

Again, I believe it is a rule in equity that he who demands equity must come into court with clean hands. This bill shows upon its face that there is an attempt on the part of this Mr. Love in the presentation of this claim to obtain that from the Government to which he is not entitled either legally or equitably. He does not come into court, therefore, with clean hands himself; and applying the old maxim to him I should, if I were a chancellor sitting in his case, turn him out of court.

Upon both these grounds, first, that it was a mere speculation in which he embarked, and which proved to be a disadvantageous one to him; and second, that coming here addressing himself to the equitable consideration of the Senate he has not put himself in such a position as entitles his equitable claim to any consideration on the part of the Senate, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. President, it seems that experience touching the culture of cotton is invoked upon the subject under discussion at this moment. I myself have been cultivating cotton every year for more than thirty years, and am engaged now in cultivating several plantations.

The question presented to the Senate now is one that has to me only one side. I can readily appreciate the views of distinguished Senators here in looking rigidly, vigilantly, to the interests of the Government. That is all proper enough, and properly in place always to a certain extent. But, sir, are we to be told that speculation is to be ignored? I am not in the habit of begging questions. Mr. Love may have gone there for speculation. I say that he had a right to do so; and if he was thus prompted to speculate, and to speculate honestly, keeping within the proper rules, surely it is commendable and not prejudicial to him.

Equity is invoked; its rules are spoken of. Well, I say fraud is not to be presumed; it must be proven. It may be proven by circumstances. Now have we the circumstances here to show that Mr. Love's hands are not clear and free from fraud? I think so. The testimony of witnesses that we have no right to say are anything but of the very first order, who are all presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proven, is clear; and that testimony is good, and it shows that there is no fraud appertaining to this claim.

My friends who have experience in the culture and production of cotton go on and itemize. It is not necessary for us to do so on this occasion. The testimony I think would authorize me fairly to arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Love had bona fide eighty acres of cotton matured at the moment the land was taken possession of by the Government. It does not matter what that cotton cost. It is unnecessary to itemize. We might go into the history of the war at that time, and it might be readily shown perhaps that bacon to subsist the hands to cultivate that cotton cost one dollar a pound and sugar perhaps one dollar a pound, and other articles at extravagant prices. We must recollect that there was an accompanying fact to that, that the cotton was proven to be worth $1.75 per pound. When we consider this, the great part of the difficulty about these items vanishes. The prices charged for mules and other items are said to be fabulous. Perhaps a lawyer may have gotten up this account, and he may have advised Mr. Love that it was better to put in all these items. The things were very high, no doubt; but the surroundings justified high prices at the time, and he has made out the account upon that high basis. But when you come down to the facts and nothing but the truth, eighty bales of cotton would have been produced, I take it from the testimony, under any circumstances. If it was worth $100 a bale, there is an item of $8,000.

Of the bounden duty on the part of this Government to remunerate this citizen, I think there can be no question. The United States through its agent rented this land to a man who cultivated it by the sweat of his brow. He furnished the means to do so. I am told that he took a risk in doing so. Most assuredly any cotton-planter when he plants the seed takes risks, the risks of drought, the risk of too much rain, the risk of worms, and everything pertaining to the uncertainty of a crop. A man must look at all these things as he walks through life in all the avenues of his transactions.

After the Government of the United States had possession of that land, it does not matter who the poor suffering man was that was dispossessed. This man was not required to look to that owner, or to who the owner was, in any way, manner, or shape. Sufficient it was that he desired to make money, and there was the Government of the United States in possession of this property. What better title could he expect? What better could he desire? None under the sun. He agreed to pay bona fide to the Government so much for the use of that property. Thus there were mutual rights, and they were such as cannot be controverted in any court or elsewhere. He raised the cotton, and there is no doubt, from the proof, that it would have been worth $200 a bale. One dollar and seventy-five cents a pound for five hundred pounds would be more than that; but put it down to $100, and I would be willing to vote the bill very readily at $8,000. I should not like to go the $20,000, or the $15,000 additional amendment proposed by my distinguished friend from Iowa; but $8,000 would be a very reasonable estimate, seeing that there were eighty bales of cotton, and $100 a bale would be a low price at that time. I think he is entitled to that.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, this shifty speculator from Iowa took a ticket in a lottery; he drew a blank; and in my opinion he is not entitled to one cent from Congress. He entered with a Treasury agent into a contingent agreement, based upon the principle, in substance, of the horse-doctor who gives his services upon the agreement of "no cure no pay." He undertook, in the event that he raised cotton, to pay one cent a pound upon the cotton for the rental of the land. He raised no cotton, and he paid no rent. Had he been fortunate in raising and securing the cotton which he committed to the earth in this exposed and hazardous place, he could never have been called upon for more rent than $400 had he cultivated the ground as a garden-spot, as a model plantation, and realized from it the utmost fruit that could experimentally have been realized from the alluvial ground of the river. Within all ordinary probabilities had he been successful, $200, which would be counting a half bale to the acre, would have been the limit which in any event the Government was to receive; and for that contingent rent, no part of which was ever rendered, this claimant took possession of eighty-eight acres of ground to devote it to the cultivation of cotton.

He comes here with an allegation that because a camp was made upon this field at a time when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ALCORN] tells us the cotton had ripened, was ready to be picked, and being suddenly snatched up and cast aside that the ground might be occupied for another purpose, was still in substance as marketable, as valuable as it would have been had that day been selected by the owner for the picking and the picking been caused by him—he comes here telling us that the sudden removal of the cotton from the ground at that time and under those circumstances inflicted upon him a loss of $128,000.

I concur with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] if it was that Senator who first said that he who asks equity should do equity, that he who appeals to the discretion and to the generosity—for I shall insist in a moment that it is to the generosity of Congress that this petition is addressed—of a power or a tribunal should be clean-handed as the first step, as the first title to be heard. If he comes with his hands soiled, if he comes as one seeking to overreach, to snatch from the Treasury a sum of money to which beyond all peradventure we are authorized upon these papers to say he was never entitled, he discredits himself, he discredits his claim, and in my opinion he gives up the day to which he is entitled in court, provided his case be as this case is, only an appeal to generosity and to discretion. Let me for a few moments examine the question and see whether I am right in the classification to which I assign this application.

The Government owes protection to every citizen. It owed none to this man which it did not owe to every other citizen in all our borders. It stood in the attitude in one sense of a landlord to the claimant being tenant; but the committee has told us, and without the information of the committee we should know it, that that relation gives rise to nothing which controls or governs us. As the committee has said that and it seems to be conceded, I will not pause to state the reasons, which are sufficiently obvious, to show that this citizen took no special right to be protected owing to the fact that he was one party to an agreement to which the Government was the other, touching the occupation of this land. He, therefore, is no better off than he would have been had he been the owner of this property. The honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] says, and very truly, that he is not quite so well off; but for my purpose now, I put him in the place of the owner of the property, of the fee, and concede the owner, to test the argument, to have been loyal, in the act of paying the allegiance he owed to the Government of the United States.

Then we are told that, by the order of a military officer, a force camped upon this ground. I would inquire of the Senator who drew our attention to that fact, whether a camp is ever made or a march takes place across a country, except by the order of a military commander? Does an army range and straggle as a man would gunning, here or there, over the country traversed? Not at all; but the track of an army, its march is in intendment of law and in fact, in militry fact, determined by the commander, the officer, in this case the very officer by whom this order was given. So when an army halts, it is done by order; and when it bivouacs or camps, it is done by order. Not that the commanding general indicates the precise spot where every tent-stake shall be driven; but the fact of encampment and the locality of the camp is fixed of course by the authority supreme and appropriate for that purpose. That is the officer in command. Senators around me who have done military service will know whether I am right in my statement, and correct me if I am wrong.

We have, then, in this case the familiar, habitual case of an army marching or an army encamping under the direction of the commander of that army or that force. Now, will some Senator distinguish this case from the multitude of cases in which a corps, or a brigade, or only a battalion tramped across a wheat-field, or a meadow, or a field upon which some cereal was growing? If this claimant stands in the place of the owner, and if a cotton crop be like any other crop, and a cotton-field be like any other field lying within the theater of war, where is the distinction between this man and the man whose fence-rails were taken to kindle a camp-fire, or the man whose grass was trodden down, or the man whose premises were occupied for any purpose whatever which suited the march or the convenience of a passing army?

Is it to be said that every owner within the theater of war whose growing trees were slaughtered to give gun-range, as the forest standing around Arlington was slaughtered in the green glories of summer—we all saw it; I saw it as the first fact in war, which made a deep impression upon me; all those stately trees lying prostrate in order that guns might speak without being interrupted by their branches or their trunks—is it to be said that upon half a continent, everywhere between Mason and Dixon's line and the Gulf, wherever trees were slaughtered to give gun-range, wherever fences were taken to build a camp-fire, wherever grass or barley or oats crops were trodden down under the hoof of war, the owner is to come and summon Congress to render from the Treasury the total of his account? I think, Mr. President, no Senator, I think no claim agent has traveled quite so far on this road toward the Treasury; and yet in principle that is this case with a remaining act bearing against the claimant, to which I now come.

He being in Iowa, not within the theater of war, not within the confederate lines, of his own motion, as matter of speculation, balancing chance against chance, as a brave bidder, if you please, in the auction of opportunities, chose to cast out his shoe over a possession in Arkansas. He went to White River; he went within the confederate lines; he went to a place, as I understand the Senator from Mississippi, where the war, like a cross-cut saw applied to a log, was crossing and recrossing; and there he sat himself down to cultivate a garden, to plant in the rich but troubled and exposed soil which he selected, a crop which if it flowered and ripened, with gold then at 285 and its return measured in currency, was to satisfy some of the dreams of avarice. But if before a blast of war it failed to ripen, or having ripened it failed to be picked, or having been picked it failed to be baled and sold and rendered to him, then this golden opportunity which he balanced against the chances and preferred notwithstanding the chances, was to be thrown away. Well, Mr. President, that is the principle upon which every man goes down to the sea in ships. That is the principle upon which every man speculates on the land or on the sea. If he succeeds, he survives, he flourishes; if he fails, his venture is gone, and sometimes he goes with it. That was this claimant. As I said in the beginning, he bought a ticket in a lottery, and in place of drawing a prize it drew a blank. It seems to me that the whole of this case is sufficiently disposed of by that statement; and when we take the information given us by the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. ROBERTSON,] who undoubtedly is quite warranted in saying that he understands this business thoroughly, by the Senator from Mississippi, who has an equal personal understanding of it, and see that upon facts like these an attempt was made to obtain from the Treasury $128,000 as the speculative profits, unrealized, during a single season, from eighty-eight acres of land, which were under the very hoof of war when he entered upon them, it seems to me that it calls, and calls very loudly, upon the Senate to establish a precedent in this case and to take care to establish it, in the quaint language of the law, so that it will be example to all others in like cases offending. I think if this bill should be indefinitely postponed, it would be valuable as a notice served upon all concerned that among other things Congress has intelligence and integrity enough to wish to be fairly treated, and has integrity enough to resent at a proper time and in a proper way all attempts to impose upon us, and to attempt through us as trustees to receive inequitable, unjust sums of trust money from the public Treasury.

Now, Mr. President, I shall vote to postpone this bill indefinitely. I shall so vote as to deny not only speculative damages, but all right to restoration of the expenses embarked in this venture, and upon the ground that this man, like the child in the menagerie, paid his money and took his choice. In short he could invest his money and his time safely as an investment and realize upon them, or he could buy lottery tickets, or he could game with cards, with stocks, with speculation. He chose to enter into a very hazardous venture. Had he succeeded he would have been fortunate. He failed, and here he is; and in my judgment we have nothing to do with him, and we can do nothing in his favor except by proceeding upon a principle utterly ruinous if we are to adopt it in all these cases, and indefensible, as I insist, upon any doctrine of public or municipal law.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa I wish to say that on Monday next the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] who has charge of the civil rights bill, will ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration and hold on to it until it is disposed of.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask the Senator from Iowa to allow me to give notice at this time that I shall on Monday next ask the Senate to take up the resolution offered by myself on Tuesday last, in relation to the troubles and the condition of affairs in Arkansas. Of course I do not expect to antagonize any other measure; but I suppose it will not take a very considerable length of time to dispose of the resolution to which I refer.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate more than a very few moments, if I can have their attention to what I say.

The debate upon this subject has been a most extraordinary one. Some one has said that if the very best man on earth were a candidate for office, before the election was over it would be established that he was the greatest rogue. This gentleman came to the Congress of the United States making a claim. He certainly had a right to come here. Hundreds and thousands of others come here. He comes with the finding of the committee that there is no word of complaint against his integrity or his honesty; and yet Senators upon this floor say that his claim is a fraud upon its face. They say he was but a shifty speculator; that he bought a ticket in a lottery, and drew a blank, and absolutely talk to this Senate as if he was a dishonest man and a scoundrel because he engaged in this business; a business that the country invited him to engage in; that the laws of the land and the regulations of the Treasury Department invited him to engage in. Here were these lands that it was important to the country should be cultivated. We were then in a condition in which it was all-important that every pound of cotton possible should be raised and shipped abroad that we might have gold in return. Men were invited everywhere throughout the country to go and take possession of these lands and cultivate them and produce cotton. A contract was made by this claimant with an agent of the Government to take possession of these lands and a promise to give return; and yet he was a "shifty speculator;" he was a "fraud" and a scoundrel! The man comes with his claim to Congress, based upon an honest contract with an agent of the Government, and because he failed by reason of the act of the Government to produce anything, Senators say he drew a blank and therefore he must suffer the consequences!

Mr. President, let me put a case. Suppose this cotton had been picked and put in bales, and was there upon the wharf ready to be shipped, and by the command of the officers of the Government this cotton had been taken and sold, or had been taken and used for the purposes of the Army, as in other cases it was taken largely for bedding for the soldiers, my kind and good friend from New York would say he invested in a lottery and drew a blank, and therefore he shall have nothing! That is just what he would say in the case supposed; and yet every day in this body we are allowing just such claims. Those persons are not speculators; they are not scoundrels and knaves; but this man having put his all in this field, and having put his all there under a contract with the Government, having his cotton just ready to pick, there comes along an officer of the Government and takes possession of it, and it is all lost to him; and now because he asks compensation for this wrong he is said to be a dishonest man and a scoundrel.

The Senator from Mississippi said that he made this contract with Callicott, and Callicott was a great rascal. What of it? Does that make any difference? He had a contract with an authorized agent of the Government, and under that contract he went into possession.

It is said that this was a case where the Army destroyed this property as in the case of a march. Not so. It is precisely similar to a case that we passed this morning without question where the Army had taken possession of a house in West Virginia and destroyed it, and no one pretended to make any question as to the liability of the Government for that house.

It is said that Mr. Love made no return to the Government. Why? That return would have been made but for the act of the Government or its officer in destroying this property.

It is said also that this man has made an extraordinary claim. He came with his prayer to Congress asking compensation for the wrong done him. The testimony is that the property destroyed would have been worth so much if gathered and in the market. He does not ask any such sum as that; he asks such reasonable compensation as he is entitled to, and no more.

Why, Mr. President, we seem to forget the condition of things in that country at the time of this destruction. We seem to forget that it was necessary to take there the tools and the animals and whatever was necessary for the purpose of raising cotton in that country. It may be that his estimate is extraordinarily large, according to our ideas now, but we must not forget the condition of the country and the circumstances under which he went there for the purpose of raising this cotton.

Mr. President, I do not propose to continue this discussion. I have only this to say: If the Senate, after having allowed one claim after another in principle precisely like this, are prepared to say now that this man, going down there under the invitation of the Government, taking possession of this land under a contract, and losing as largely as he did, his all, is to be made an exception to all the cases we have heretofore decided, so be it. I have proposed that $20,000 shall be allowed for this claim. I am not in the habit of asking an allowance for a claim that I do not believe has justice, equity, and merit in it. I think I am as cautious and careful as any Senator on this floor in that respect, and as little disposed to ask an extraordinary allowance as any Senator here. I believe that $20,000 would be a fair allowance. If in that I shall be overruled and the Senate conclude that $5,000 is the proper sum, so be it. If they say that this man, coming here with this claim, with no word of complaint, according to the finding of the committee, in the least affecting his integrity or honesty as a man, he having invested his all in this enterprise, should receive but $5,000, so be it. If, after having established the number of precedents we have, the Senate say that this man shall be made an exception, then let it be so declared.

I desire to say one word in reference to what was said by the Senator from Delaware. He says this man was there in the possession of the property of another man, and the Senator cannot conceive how conscientiously he could occupy such land. I was utterly surprised that any one should make such a suggestion as that. These lands had been taken possession of by the Government because of the acts of those who owned them, taken possession of by the Government for its own use and benefit; and it was seeking to turn them to as much advantage as possible to the country in its then condition; and we are told this man was wanting in conscience and integrity and honesty because he occupied this land, not by his own mere act, but under a contract of the Government, a contract under a law passed, as was believed, in the best interests of the Government and for the purpose of yielding a revenue to the Government as far as possible, and at the same time increase this great product, cotton, and get in return from abroad gold, which we then so much needed.

Mr. TIPTON. I have only one remark to make on this subject. I have never known a claim to come before the Senate that I thought was so honest, so legitimate, so fair, as the claim for reasonable expenses in this case. If I rent land to a tenant and afterward take possession of his crop, preventing him from gathering it, I have to pay damages. In this case we rented a farm and then took possession of the crop, and we must pay reasonable damages. There is no question about it.

Mr. BOREMAN. I have but a word to say in addition to what I have already said on this subject. In what I said a short time since I was speaking in opposition to the motion of the Senator from Iowa to increase the amount to be allowed to this claimant, and not in support particularly of the report of the committee as it stood. But, sir, I have a word or two to say in support of the report made by the committee.

This gentleman came before the committee with evidence of a character above reproach. About that there was no question; the evidence was full and complete. He had served in the Army during the early part of the war until he became disabled on account of some affliction that had come upon him during his service. Possibly he had been in this very region of country where these lands are located, though I am not sure about that. However, he was compelled because of physical disability to leave the Army. He was invited by the laws and regulations of the Treasury Department under the laws to go into this business; and it is upon that point that I wish to say a word.

The Government thought during the war that it was good policy for this country, in view of all the circumstances surrounding us, to take charge of the captured and abandoned property, and among other kinds of property was real estate, and it sought also to have that property leased out and cultivated, and in this there was the purpose to take charge of the unfortunate class of persons in the South who had been freed, or were being freed by the action of the Government—to give them protection, to give them sustenance, and ultimately to bring them out of their difficulties and have them in a good and fair condition and prepare them for what was ultimately to be their destiny. Congress thought so much of this policy that they took care to pass a law on the subject, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make regulations for the leasing out of this abandoned land which was thus taken possession of. They did not leave it simply to the Secretary to be guided by his own judgment in this business, but they provided in the statute that the lands should be leased under such regulations as should be prescribed. Let me read a portion of the statute. Referring to a former act which had been passed directing captured and abandoned property to be taken into possession and disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury, the second section of the act of July 2, 1864, says:

> That, in addition to the captured and abandoned property to be received, collected, and disposed of, as provided in said act, the said agents shall take charge of and lease, for periods not exceeding twelve months, the abandoned lands, houses, and tenements within the districts therein named, and shall also provide, in such leases or otherwise, for the employment and general welfare of all persons within the lines of national military occupation within said insurrectionary States formerly held as slaves, who are or shall become free.

It was simply carrying out the policy of the Government during the prosecution of the war that this lease was taken by this claimant. He was not an adventurer, as he has been denounced; but in pursuance of the policy of the Government, and in assisting the Government to carry out that policy, he went down there and leased this land. He took into his employment colored people who formerly had been slaves. They were to be provided for, and he agreed in this contract, which was signed by him and the agent of the Government, to pay a particular price per acre. He was to pay the Government one cent per pound on all cotton raised as rent for the property, and then he was to pay the Government another cent per pound to go into the fund for the support and education of that class of persons who had formerly been slaves. And here is the basis of the action of the committee, that in carrying out the policy of the Government this gentleman had gone down there at the invitation of the Government and had leased this property.

Mr. CONKLING. How at the invitation of the Government?

Mr. BOREMAN. The invitation was by an act of Congress passed for this purpose, and rules and regulations of the Treasury Department which are here before me.

Mr. CONKLING. You mean the captured and abandoned property act?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. A very general invitation!

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir; it was a general invitation to all persons who would assist the Government in carrying out the policy which it had adopted. Under those circumstances the committee thought that while the Government did not guarantee protection to this gentleman, while he went down there, it is true, to take his chances in the fortunes of war, nevertheless, inasmuch as the Government had put him there, and he had agreed to pay the Government rent for this property, and he was assisting the Government to carry out its policy in regard to those who had been slaves, the Government ought to make him whole as to the amount of money he had expended if it could ascertain that sum, and the committee fixed that sum at $5,000, as here reported. It seems to me that it is reasonable and right that the Government should make him whole under such circumstances.

This, Mr. President, is about all I have to say in support of the report. The claimant and his friends thought that we had not given him enough, as has been made manifest to-day by the Senator from his State, who makes a motion to increase the sum to $20,000; but with all the lights we had, gathered from the testimony before us and from other gentlemen who had a knowledge of the cultivation of cotton, we fixed this sum. I think myself under the circumstances the committee were authorized to do so. I think it might be claimed at their hands that they should make this man whole and allow him the moneys he had actually expended.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, I believe all the members of the Committee on Claims who are present in the Senate Chamber to-day have expressed themselves upon the merits of this claim of Major Love except myself. I participated in the deliberations of the committee on this case; and it is proper before the vote is taken on the amendment of my friend from Iowa that I should briefly give the reasons why I oppose this amendment and shall sustain the report of the committee.

And here I wish to enter my protest against the doctrines which have been pressed upon the Senate to-day by the honorable Senator from New York. I do not subscribe to them. I do not expect ever to subscribe to them. But it is not necessary that I should discuss them to-day, because this case is peculiar and is not affected at all, in my judgment, by the principles which he advocates.

Major Love was a tenant of the Government of the United States. His right depends upon a contract that he entered into with the United States in which, for a certain rent reserved, the United States leased to him the land in controversy for the purpose of raising a crop of cotton. He was, therefore, lawfully upon this soil. He was there under a contract of the United States; and that contract bound the United States not to interfere with him in the prosecution of his rights under it; or if a military necessity required that they should take from him the land that had been leased to him for a year, they should fully indemnify him for the damages that he sustained.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator receive a question at that point?

Mr. PRATT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CONKLING. Were the rights of this claimant other or greater than they would have been had he been the owner of the eighty-eight acres?

Mr. PRATT. I think precisely the same.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, if I may be allowed further, why does the Senator introduce as a part of his argument the fact that there was a contract by which he occupied this land, which he says bound the Government not to interfere? If it be the case of an owner of this land, why not discuss it upon that principle and leave out the particular fact, if the Senator thinks it makes no distinction, that he happened to be a tenant holding by an agreement given by Treasury agents?

Mr. PRATT. I do not know but that I was too hasty in giving my assent to the proposition of the Senator from New York. I hold, however, that if he had been the owner of the land and was a loyal citizen and performed his duties as a citizen, obeyed his allegiance, paid his taxes, and the Government saw fit in the exercise of its supreme power to seize upon his farm and turn it into a desert, and destroy his growing crops, the Government should pay him for his loss.

Mr. CONKLING. My question takes this very man; it is unnecessary to describe him. I ask the Senator whether Mr. Love, this claimant, with all his merits, had he been the owner of this property, would have had any less or different rights in respect to it than he has now under the agreement?

Mr. PRATT. I do not think it is necessary to discuss that question at all. I am discussing the question as it presents itself to the Senate upon a contract which the United States had made with him, that so far as they were concerned they would hold hands off and allow him to plant and to reap his crop. That is the position of the Government of the United States in this controversy. They stipulate for rent. They do guarantee, although it is not expressed in the contract, that if it is necessary to destroy all the benefit of the contract to him, they will indemnify him for it.

I am not troubled, therefore, Mr. President, about the legal question in this case. The only trouble is as to the amount that should be awarded to Major Love; and here I think the claim of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is an extravagant one. It cannot be, in the face of the testimony we have had here from several representatives from the Southern States who are accustomed to cotton planting and know what it costs to put eighty-eight acres of land in cotton and to bring it forward to the period that this was when it was ready for picking—it cannot be possible, I say, that the cost of planting and tending such a crop can be two or three times in excess of the value of the land. Two or three times in excess, do I say? Four or five times in excess; because it is claimed by Major Love in this case that he should be paid at the rate of $250 an acre for his losses in not getting the benefit of his crop. The account which he presents here, and which my honorable friend from West Virginia has read in part to the Senate, figures up some $24,300 that he says he expended in the cultivation of eighty-eight acres of land. The claim, I think, is simply preposterous. If he even was at that extraordinary expense, Congress is under no obligation to reimburse him if those expenses were unreasonable. All that we are bound to award him is what it would reasonably cost to plant and cultivate this crop of cotton, and the testimony is abundant that $5,000 will indemnify him. For that reason I must oppose the amendment of my friend from Iowa.

Mr. SCOTT. If this case is likely to elicit much further debate and there are other Senators who are inclined to debate it, I shall feel inclined to ask that it be laid over. There are several other bills upon which I wish to secure action.

Mr. BOREMAN. Let us vote on it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust my friend from Pennsylvania will allow the vote to be taken. I think there is no disposition further to discuss the bill. Let us get it out of the way.

Mr. SCOTT. Then there are one or two words I desire to say upon it myself. Had it not been that the Senator who reported the bill and made the report in his closing remarks indicated what might have been construed into his assent to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, I perhaps should not have said anything upon the bill; but I was constrained to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa for the reason that I believed the bill, as reported by the committee, did allow as much as ought to be allowed.

Mr. BOREMAN. The Senator is certainly mistaken in stating that I gave my assent to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. I have said that I feared what the Senator said might be construed into an assent. He may not have intended that, but his remarks were such as to leave the impression that he would not be very much dissatisfied if the amendment was made; and I would have been dissatisfied if it had been.

Mr. BOREMAN. I do not agree to the amendment at all. I stated that I should not object if the Senate upon the facts should find it according to their judgment to allow Mr. Love something more than the committee had reported; but I never intended to say that I thought the Senate ought to agree to the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Having risen again, I only desire to say one or two things, and very briefly.

Something has been said in reference to the claimant himself. I think the only thing that the evidence has developed against him is the amount of claim which has been presented, for my information from other sources—from gentlemen who have known him elsewhere than in Iowa or in Arkansas—is that he is a gentleman of good character and of reputation. I have been addressed by one or two parties who know him, who reside in the western part of my own State, and bear high testimony to his character. How this claim may have been prepared, whether by the aid of counsel who advised him to put in enough to permit of a considerable discount, or how it may have been I do not know; but I am here as a member of the Committee on Claims to indorse what the Senator from New York has said; that is, to give fair notice to all claimants that I think that committee is composed of such material that there need be no expectation of securing any favor in that committee by leaving a margin for a discount. We will stamp, I think, upon any claimant the mark of our reprobation who seeks to impose upon the Government by putting in an exorbitant claim; and applicants had better be honest at once than to suffer the consequences of imputed or attempted dishonor. I say this much not with reference to this claim, but upon general principles. I have said that this claimant has been indorsed to me as an honest man, but his claim was put in certainly at a figure entirely above what it would bear.

Having said that much, let me come to the main question in the case. The discussion has assumed a character which might leave the impression that this was a case which might be classified within those damages caused by the ravages of war by the march of an invading army or by a temporary encampment for a night or for a day. There is this distinction in this case, and it was this distinction which led me to consent to reporting it to the amount of $5,000: here was an expedition traveling by boat upon the White River. I read from the report, which says:

On the 8th day of September, 1864, Brigadier-General Dennis, commanding some fifteen thousand United States troops, arrived with said forces at the mouth of White River, and after examining the vicinity to select a proper place of encampment for said forces, issued the following order:

[Special Orders No. 19.]

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Mouth of White River, Arkansas, September 8, 1864.

3. There being no ground in this vicinity suitable for an encampment, except ing this field of growing cotton, claimed as private property by Major Hiram W. Love, the troops of this command will at once disembark and go into camp on this aforesaid field, the same being necessary for military purposes.

By order of Brigadier-General E. S. Dennis:

WILLIAM E. KUHN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

I certify on honor that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original order, as appears upon records on file in this office.

WILLIAM E. KUHN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

It was claimed as private property. It was occupied by the command of an officer having charge of fifteen thousand troops, for the purposes of the Government. It was to that extent certainly an appropriation of the property at that time. Now, if it had been an appropriation of private property under ordinary circumstances, he might have claimed, and the committee might have allowed him, the whole value of his property; but the other circumstance which led the committee to take this case out of that rule was that he went into this probable theater of war, taking this property it is true under lease from the Government, and running the ordinary risks from the enemy or from other casualties of that character; and therefore the committee considered it proper only to reimburse him the money which he expended in pursuing the policy of the Government in undertaking to cultivate cotton. We may have gone too far in doing that. I am not here to become the advocate of any claim in any other form than that of presenting the merits of the case to the Senate for their decision; and having done that in this instance I leave the case for their decision.

I do not see enough in this case to make it a dangerous precedent if we allow this man the $5,000. I do think that even if his claim could properly be made out for $8,000, we shall be giving him enough when we pay him $5,000 upon a claim made out for $24,000; and therefore I trust that the Senator from Iowa may see his way clear to withdraw his amendment offered asking for $20,000, and take the amount reported by the committee, so that we may dispose of this bill and not let it stand in the way of other bills reported from the committee on which action ought to be had.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I have been taken somewhat to task or chided a little by the honorable Senator from Iowa whose constituent is the claimant here, and perhaps by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania because of the way I alluded to him. I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa——

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me just one word. The claimant in this case is not a constituent of mine, and has not been for years.

Mr. CONKLING. I exonerate the Senator from anything that he deems an imputation in that regard. I supposed he was the Senator's constituent; but I withdraw the statement. The honorable Senator from Iowa with a very emphatic manner and expression turned toward me when he said that I had spoken of Major Love as a shifty speculator, and he proceeded to interpret those words as conveying a charge that he was a fraud and I think he added a rascal. I beg to say to the Senate that I intended no such thing, nor did I say anything like it. "Shifty" is defined I believe to be "thrift; fertility in expedients;" and I deemed this citizen of Iowa fertile in expedients when under that general invitation to which my friend from West Virginia has called our attention, which resides in the statute-book and more especially in the act touching captured and abandoned property, he went down to Arkansas to make his fortune in this way. I thought that warranted my speaking of him as a thriving or a thrifty citizen, and one fertile in the means and ways of making money and promoting his fortune. I have not the pleasure of knowing Major Love, and I do not mean to make any imputation whatever upon him except so far as an imputation may be involved in discussing the account which he has presented and his case as it stands before us; and in that sense I mean my remarks to be wholly impersonal. No matter how the claimant may spell his name; no matter from what State he comes; no matter what may be his merits or demerits, the case is the same as it stands before us, and we have no business, let me say, to know Major Love for or against him. We are performing a quasi judicial office; we are supposed to be blinded to the extraneous circumstances of the case and to hold with unmoving and untrembling hand the scales of justice. So much for what I said about Major Love.

Mr. President, I venture to say there is not a lawyer in this body who will jeopard his reputation by asserting that the claimant in this case occupies any higher footing in law or equity than he would had he been the owner of these premises. I cite the honorable Senator from Iowa, I need no higher authority, to prove my proposition. He admitted and asserted it. I cite the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, who deserves all the distinction he enjoys as a lawyer, confirming the same position. My honorable friend from Indiana speaking at first and speaking ingenuously admitted the proposition, although he seemed a little inclined—

To back, recoil, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

I assume, therefore, the law to be that Major Love is in no better condition than if he was the owner of this property; which position, passing from it, brings me to the real purpose—and that shall be only momentary—for which I rose, to record my dissent to the intimation (it was scarcely more than that) which fell just now from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Claims. He intimates that a distinction exists in respect of the owner of property lying in the theater of war, between its destruction by a march and its destruction by a pause or resting of troops in an encampment. That I deny. I deny it as a proposition of law; I deny it as a theory of ethics; and I say it finds no place in the reasoning which you find applied by courts and publicists in matters of equity. I will not discuss it at any length, but let me illustrate it for a moment.

What is the gravamen of the complaint here? The destruction of cotton, is it not? Does it make any difference then whether the troops rested upon this ground an hour or twenty-four hours in the process which destroyed the cotton? Does it make any difference in the case of a field of wheat, whether passing over it with army wagons and cannon, passing over it with cavalry and infantry, it is trampled into the earth, or whether the same force sits down upon it for a night or a day or a week, and destroys it? How does that make any difference? This is not an action for the rental of the property for the occupation of troops. If it were that, if the claimant were charging for the occupation of his land, and measuring it by the hour, it might be important to know whether that occupation by the troops continued for an hour, or a day, or a week. But when the gist of his complaint is that the cotton was destroyed, I return to my question, what difference does it make whether that destruction came from an all-night or all-day occupation, or only because troops swept over it and annihilated the crop?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator at that point permit me to put a question to him?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. There have been numerous cases in which both in the theater of war and in the non-rebellious States the Army occupied buildings for three weeks, four weeks, or a month, troops were put in them; they were occupied for hospitals; they were occupied for camps, ranging from two weeks up to six months or a year; and in many of those cases compensation has been made not only for rent as a rental for the premises occupied, but also for the injury to the property occupied during that time, for destruction. If those cases be sound, where does the Senator fix the limit between a night's occupation, two weeks' or a month's occupation, and such cases? Is there a limit of time? Or are we to be governed by the circumstance as to whether it is a deliberate appropriation in view of all the circumstances, or the act of the army traveling on to a definite point and when there is no time to pause as to whose property is traveled over?

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator said "non-rebellious States." Does he mean that?

Mr. SCOTT. I have said that there have been numerous instances.

Mr. CONKLING. In non-rebellious States?

Mr. SCOTT. In which such payment has been made in non-rebellious States.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. And also in the rebellious States.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I draw the line where war draws it. I draw the line between the case of the occupation of a building in the city of Washington or in the city of Philadelphia for the convenience and shelter of men, although they may be soldiers, and the case of destruction in actual war; and when I do so draw the line I answer fully the question which the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has put to me. I think the facts would have warranted him in putting a question more difficult to answer, which would be this: I have in mind a case of the occupation of a church, like that to which reference was made and in respect of which I propose to enter a motion to reconsider, for the purpose of having the bill conform to the facts, and not as I understand from the Senator Pennsylvania, if I may quote him, a bill much broader than the facts. The Senator might have asked me what is the distinction between occupying a building in a State which was involved in the insurrection and its injury by act of war, and that question I think would require a more careful and considerate answer, and yet I feel that that case is entirely distinguishable from this. Take the case of those who lay in the track of Sherman's army when it swept from the mountains to the sea—a desolated track twenty or forty miles in width. Are they to be paid? I do not think the Senator will say they should be paid; and yet that case presents the distinction as against the case of the occupation of a church in Virginia by soldiers as tenants or occupants for a considerable period of time, and the difference, I conceive, consists sufficiently, although not wholly, in this: There being a church or any other building, if you choose, (and for the present purpose, as that was before us this morning, take a church in Virginia,) not by beating it down with guns, not by passing over it in the advance of war, not in the actual belligerent process which I think is quite like an earthquake or a hail-storm in respect to the consequences which it visits upon its victims, but by an exceptional, intentionally peaceful act savoring of ordinary transactions, an agent to the Government takes possession or goes into the possession of a building, and that building is used, not for purposes of war, or for purposes of fighting, although involved of course in the general belligerent operations, but for the purposes of occupation, as it might be without war although it would not be, and there soldiers live, and the building comes to be marred, windows are broken out, the pews are removed in order that blankets or mattresses may be spread upon the floor; and, approaching a line which I admit to be somewhat shadowy, the Government says "although in strict matter of right compensation might not be recoverable, nevertheless this comes so near the case of hay or flour purchased from the Senator from Pennsylvania or any other citizen for the Army, it comes so near the case of supplies taken for the Army upon the understanding that compensation is to be made, that we will so classify it and dispose of it accordingly." Undoubtedly, the line is somewhat shadowy; undoubtedly our precedents are somewhat shadowy; undoubtedly the cases put by all the publicists are somewhat shadowy; but the general principle is, that as the tree falls so, it lies. If war rages in the country and it does not reach the State of New Jersey, the State of New Jersey is fortunate. If it does sweep over the State of New York, if it is the case of the patriot troubles of 1838 and citizens are shot and a house is burned on the northern frontier, that is the misfortune of the locality in which it happens to reside and of the people victimized by the accidents of war; and I humbly conceive it reflects no light whatever upon the case before us, and therefore I return to the point which I was about concluding.

I say that it makes no difference in principle or in equity whether Sherman with his army sweeps over fields and desolates them, or whether Sherman with his army stops for a night upon the same fields, and the same devastation follows.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator from New York allow me to ask a question at that point?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. Suppose that General Sherman has occasion instead of staying with his military forces for a single night in this cotton-field, to seize it permanently for the purpose of establishing a fort, and he holds it against the will of the owner; what does the Senator say as to the right of that owner to compensation under such circumstances?

Mr. CONKLING. I say first that extreme cases prove nothing, and hard cases make shipwreck of principle. I say that when the case of a fort comes before us or a permanent occupation, I shall be ready to deal with that case; but if my honorable friend puts it to me to test the question whether I have given any reflection to this point or not, I have no objection to entering with him upon that experimental inquiry. It is clearly distinguishable from this case, not first-cousin, as I conceive, to this case; and therefore I should dispose of it upon other principles.

Coming back to this case, I encounter the distinction whether Major Love does or does not stand in the attitude of the owner of the property across which war has swept. My friend from Pennsylvania reads from the report to show that certain troops, being conveyed by water in place of marching on the land, camped upon this property. Does he read to argue that because a transport carried the troops, in place of the cavalry riding their horses and the infantry using their legs to get to this point, a distinction arises? Does he read it to show that because a boat was employed to go along easier by river until a point was reached when the boat was no longer to be used, when that kind of transportation was to be dismissed and they take to the land, those above the point where they landed are more or less in condition to demand damages than they would be if the troops had come up or down the river, passing over its bank in place of passing over the thread of the stream? I take it not. For what does he read it then? To show that the officer directed that after examining the vicinity they should select a proper place for the encampment of his forces.

I do not suppose in practice when sundown arrives that an order to halt is given and that the officer of the day summons everybody before him and makes formal proclamation, "I hereby order that you are to camp and not to go on any further." Doubtless it is done in a more informal way. When sundown is reached, unless there is some occasion for a forced march, the expectation is that troops will halt, and very likely nothing occurs except the commanding officer says to an aid, "We have probably gone far enough for to-night; we had better stop." But no matter what the form may be, in law and in fact it is the order of the commanding general; and so is the course of the march the order of the commanding general. When troops traverse my wheat-field and trample it out, and I sue for the crop and the property destroyed, I am precisely upon the same footing whether the troops rested there overnight or whether they passed over it in an hour. That is common sense, and that is the law, as I maintain, and that consists with the equities of the case and with every discrimination which can be applied to it. If I am right in that, how does the case of Major Love differ from the case of everybody else over whose property the wheels and the destruction of war passed? I say not at all. I have listened to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, and I see no distinction. I say the case is that of an owner across whose property troops passed; and whether they remained an hour or a week is of no possible consequence until you come to the question of a rental for occupation. Then it is of the same consequence and no more that would exist in a case between my friend from Indiana and myself if I had used his horse, his farm, his house, or his carriage, and was to pay for it by time, when of course it would be important to know whether my use had been continued for an hour or had extended to a week or to a year. But when he comes to bring an action against me for laming his horse, for defacing his house, it is matter of consequence upon the question of right or the question of damage, whether it took me an hour to lame the horse or a day to injure the house, or whether I was more industrious and did it in a moment. That is my answer to that part of the proposition, and I think it a sufficient answer, and I say that unless we are going to establish a precedent going far beyond anything that I know of that we have done, we cannot act favorably upon this bill.

The Senator from Iowa said, if I understood him right, that this morning action had been taken—it must have been sub silentio, I think—upon another bill touching a church involving this principle. I understand that that bill is easily distinguishable from this, distinguishable by a broad distinction; and yet I learn that the language of the bill is not adapted to the particular case to which the bill applies, and therefore I shall ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to consent that the bill be reconsidered, and that it be changed so as to apply to the church and the instance upon which it is to operate. To that I presume there will be no objection. If I am right in the statement made to me by the chairman of the Committee on Claims as to the facts of that case, they have little or nothing to do with this, and the only similarity to be found is in a somewhat broad use of language on the face of the bill, which language I think, and I think the Senator from Pennsylvania will agree with me, ought to be changed and narrowed to mean precisely and nothing more than the case before us.

Mr. SCOTT. That I may not be misunderstood about that case of the occupation of a church in West Virginia, to compensate for which a bill passed this morning, I will say that the language of the bill, as it caught my ear when it was read at the desk, was for the destruction of the church, which would imply that the whole building had been destroyed. My recollection of the facts of the case is that the claim was for the occupation of a church at Martinsburgh, West Virginia, or in that neighborhood, and that it was for injury, the destruction of some of the pews perhaps, and some of the internal arrangements, and for the occupation, and not for the destruction of the whole building. That is my recollection of the case.

Mr. PRATT. My friend from Pennsylvania is mistaken.

Mr. SCOTT. There were several cases from West Virginia, and I may have confounded them.

Mr. PRATT. This was the case at Martinsburgh.

Mr. SCOTT. It was the church at Martinsburgh, West Virginia, which was occupied for a considerable time by the troops, perhaps most of the winter, and then accidentally burned by the carelessness of running a stove-pipe through the roof.

Mr. PRATT. That was the case.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well; so be it. There is an illustration of the distinction for which I contend, and I insist that the bill ought to be so changed as to show upon its face the facts as they are. You pass a bill to pay for the destruction of a church. He who looks at the statute hereafter searching for a precedent may say, "This church may have been battered down by cannon."

Mr. SCOTT. My recollection is that the language of the bill is that it was destroyed by the carelessness of the troops.

Mr. DAVIS. While in the occupation of the Federal forces.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely. More and more light is shed upon it. Now it was destroyed by the carelessness of the occupant. These being in the first place established, the fact that it was occupied and occupied if I may so express it upon such peaceful terms and conditions that compensation for occupation is to be made, the custodian and tenant by means of his carelessness put himself in such a position that an action on the case would have lain against him to recover for negligence between individual and individual. Is that the case?

Mr. PRATT. My friend from New York will allow me to explain to him. The church belonged to a German congregation. It had been closed for some three months. The membership of the church was entirely loyal in all its parts. The pastor of the church was a chaplain in the Army. They were surrounded by a disloyal element. Many of the members of the church were in the Union Army and others in the Government employment. The church itself was fastened up, locked, the windows fastened, the shutters fastened. A detachment of troops, commanded by whom I forget, came along one night. It was raining and snowing, and they were wet to the skin; and they could find no other place in which to establish themselves during the night, except by entering this church, prying open the windows, then unfastening the door after an entrance had been effected. Then they kindled up a rousing fire, splitting up the seats as affording the most convenient kindling wood, and pulling off their coats and other garments they dried them by the fire. They moved the stove and put the stove-pipe up so that it ran through the cupola; and the consequence was that the wood-work became ignited and the church burned down, and there was a great scampering on the part of the soldiers to get out. Those were the circumstances of the case.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator omits one very important circumstance. This church I believe was not within the confederate lines.

Mr. PRATT. It was not.

Mr. CONKLING. That is a very important circumstance.

Mr. PRATT. The committee under the circumstances thought that the church organization ought to be paid the value of the church destroyed.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems that the committee in that case came to this conclusion, if I may paraphrase it a little, that a church or building in a locality adhering to the Government, on our side of the war, the public war, as the Supreme Court has called it, which then prevailed, as would have been the case in Pennsylvania if for example a building so situated was resorted to in stress of weather for shelter by agents representing the United States they being military men, and in the course of a use comparatively harmless, a somewhat hasty and careless experiment was made by shifting the spot through which the draught of a stove was to go, and the building was set on fire and burned down. That leaves the case in its legal elements as it would be had the same thing taken place in the State of Pennsylvania or in the State of Indiana. I think the Senator from Indiana will agree with me that in almost every particular concerning the law of the case it is distinguishable from this case. Here is an instance where the locality, the scene was not only within the theater of war, but within the confederate lines.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator will permit me to suggest to him, not by way of argument but that he may consider it in passing, whether captured and abandoned property leased by the Government under the act of 1863, is to be considered within the confederate lines until after it has been recaptured by the enemy?

Mr. CONKLING. Most decidedly, as I understand the law. "Captured and abandoned property"—the very name suggests the locality of it; and whoever takes it, as other Senators have said, takes it with his eyes wide open; and therein I conceive, although I have not dwelt upon it, arises a broad diminution of equity between that case and the case of an owner. The man who goes to occupy upon a contingent agreement of this sort captured and abandoned property in the theater of war, goes with his eyes wide open and takes his chances; he is not like a man located under his own vine and fig-tree who is overtaken by war, but he voluntarily imports himself into the theater of war.

Returning to the illustration which he furnished me, the Senator from Indiana will agree with me, first, that there is a marked difference, as old as any record of the law on this subject, between the case of property within and property without the lines of an enemy.

Mr. PRATT. Will the Senator from New York pardon me for interrupting him at that point?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRATT. Have we not broken down that distinction practically in our legislation in the year 1871, when Congress created a board of commissioners for the purpose of receiving and adjudicating upon all property in the nature of quartermaster or commissary stores which were either furnished to the Army or were taken and appropriated by the Army in the insurrectionary States and right upon the very theater of the rebellion? Has not Congress enacted that, provided the owners of the property so taken were loyal men, they shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. CONKLING. For an answer, and as I think a full answer to his question, I refer the honorable Senator to the debate which accompanied the bill to which he calls our attention.

Mr. PRATT. The statute is before me.

Mr. CONKLING. I remember the statute, I might say in some sense better than I wish I did. It was my duty, as I thought, to predict at the time that Senators and others would say at last what the Senator from Indiana has now said; but on both sides of the Chamber it was stoutly, I might say, passionately, denied. Senators who were urging that bill denied vehemently that it ever could be quoted when it became a statute as a precedent for the purpose for which the Senator from Indiana cites it now. It was denied that any committal, however slight, would occur from adopting that measure. It was said that its whole function was to provide a mere mode of perpetuating testimony, of gathering while witnesses were still alive the actual facts of the case, so that when we were gone and the facts were covered by the dust of perhaps half a century, they would not be drawn from a moldered past and exaggerated and distorted and made to play a part which in their reality they could never play.

It was said again that the proceeding was merely de bene esse—that phrase was used and will be found in the debate—that it was to gather the testimony and leave always within the power of Congress as a new and original question upon which nobody was committed, to select here and there a case of hardship, a case which could be distinguished, a case which appealing to the generosity, the benevolence, or the undefined power of Congress, would successfully invoke friendly action. And so that measure was carried. So the debate will prove; and there will appear scattered through the whole proceeding many a caveat filed against this, many a notice given and admission made and assertion reiterated, that that statute would never warrant any man in Congress or out in arguing from it that the rules had been broken down; that the settled experience of all nations and the settled doctrine of all writers upon public law had been dismissed, and that we had set up for ourselves a scheme of charity which would bankrupt and beggar any nation.

Why, sir, after the war of 1812 a statute was passed to continue only temporarily, I think about sixteen months. It was repealed under the stress of the occasion before it had run half of its life, and I have from a man who with his own ears listened to it that President Monroe said that the claims allowed under that statute amounted to a sum of money greater than the cost of the war itself.

Mr. PRATT. Does the Senator refer to the act of 1816?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRATT. Does the Senator say that act was repealed the next year?

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say the next year. I said it was repealed before it had run half its life.

Mr. PRATT. It was continued at the next Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. It was repealed.

Mr. PRATT. No, sir; it was continued.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will look to it and if he finds that the act to which I refer—we may not at the moment have our minds upon the same act—if he finds that the act passed after the war of 1812 to take account of claims for damages was not repealed before it had run out—I do not say it may not have been temporarily renewed once; I was not speaking so minutely—but if he does not find that it was repealed, then I shall begin to distrust the little remnant of confidence that I have in my recollection.

Mr. PRATT. I have the act before me. It was enacted April 9, 1816, and the section to which the honorable Senator refers I presume is the third section, which reads:

> That any person who, in the late war aforesaid, has sustained damage by the loss, capture, or destruction, by an enemy, of any horse, mule, ox, wagon, cart, boat, sleigh, or harness, while such property was in the military service of the United States, either by impressment or contract, except in cases where the risk to which the property would be exposed was agreed to be incurred by the owner, if it shall appear that such loss, capture, or destruction was without any fault or negligence on the part of the owner; and any person who, during the time aforesaid, has sustained damage by the death of any such horse, mule, or ox, in consequence of failure on the part of the United States to furnish the same with sufficient forage while in the service aforesaid, shall be allowed and paid the value thereof.

And then the fifth section provides—

> That where any property has been impressed or taken by public authority for the use or subsistence of the Army during the late war, and the same shall have been destroyed, lost, or consumed, the owner of such property shall be paid the value thereof, deducting therefrom the amount which has been paid, or may be claimed, for the use and risk of the same while in the service aforesaid.

Then in the year 1817, instead of finding this act repealed, I find the following provision:

> An act to amend the act authorizing the payment for property lost, captured, or destroyed by the enemy, while in the military service of the United States, and for other purposes, passed the 9th of April, 1816.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator thinks the act to which I referred never was repealed, if I understand him?

Mr. PRATT. I do not say that.

Mr. CONKLING. Then what is the point between the Senator and myself?

Mr. PRATT. I find that the following year the act was amended and continued. That is the point I make.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt that the act from which the Senator has read was renewed and amended as he has read. I, however, take occasion to repeat my statement, and when I have an opportunity to refer to the statute I will consent that the Senator try me for my recollection or want of recollection. I say that the act to which I refer, under which an avalanche of claims came in after the war of 1812, was repealed and was put an end to before its own lifetime, which was limited, had expired. Of course I cannot at this moment do it, but when I can refer to the book, if I do not show the Senator that I am right, I will of course admit the fault of my recollection, and that upon a point upon which it seemed to me I had a right to be quite positive.

But I wish to relieve the Senate from hearing me. I had no idea when I rose of occupying any considerable time, and therefore I come back to my statement that I do not understand that we have thus far broken down the well-settled rule of public law, that sufferers in a public war are not to receive compensation from the Government; and I leave the Senator's question there.

Mr. President, my friend at my side [Mr. BOUTWELL] has been kind enough to furnish me with the evidence which I think will sufficiently maintain my own recollection upon which I relied in a statement a moment ago. The act of 1816 contains as section 9 these words:

> That any person who, in the time aforesaid, has sustained damage by the destruction of his or her house or building by the enemy, while the same was occupied as a military deposit under the authority of an officer or agent of the United States, shall be allowed and paid the amount of such damage: Provided, It shall appear that such occupation was the cause of its destruction.

Turning now to the act which followed it, in the next March, 1817, I find these words:

> That the ninth section of the act, entitled "An act authorizing the payment for property lost, captured, or destroyed by the enemy, while in the military service of the United States, and for other purposes," passed on the 9th of April, 1816, shall be construed to extend only to houses or other buildings, occupied by an order of an officer or agent of the United States as a place of deposit for military or naval stores or as barracks for the military forces of the United States; and that, in acting on all claims arising under the aforesaid ninth section, as well on those whereon commissions are now returned and remain undecided as those on which commissions may be hereafter executed, it shall be the duty of the commissioner, appointed in virtue of the act aforesaid, carefully to examine and investigate the same, and to report the facts in such case to Congress as soon as may be, that such provision may be made for the relief of the respective claimants as shall be deemed just and proper.

So that the Senator from Indiana will see, first, that this latter act withdrew and struck down entirely the appropriation and the mandatory and positive feature of the preceding act and brought back the whole question to the mere discretion of Congress where it was before a statute had been passed at all.

The Senator will see, in the second place, that section 9, which opened the door and raised the flood-gates by which claimants might assault the Treasury, is narrowed by the act of 1817 to the doctrine of public law, and all buildings are excluded from consideration save only those occupied "as a place of deposit for military or naval stores, or as barracks."

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from New York will do me the justice to say that I did not quote that ninth section. I confined my quotations to the appropriation of personal property and payment for that.

Mr. CONKLING. In other words, the Senator confined his observation to the part of the act of which I was not speaking, and omitted entirely to include the only part of which I was speaking, namely, that which dealt with buildings and real property, there being now before us no other question.

I have said, Mr. President, much more than I intended, and I beg pardon of the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the question of amount; that has been examined by the committee. But I desire briefly to discuss the question as to the right to recover something, and it seems to me that that right is very clear indeed. I do not see how it can be disguised or obscured even.

Congress passed a law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to lease abandoned houses, lands, and tenements in States declared in insurrection, and the Secretary of the Treasury executed that authority through proper agents. This property was leased by the United States as landlord, and the person taking the lease became the tenant. It became then a simple contract of landlord and tenant, the United States acquiring the right to lease it because of the condition of war and the Secretary acting under an express law. The United States therefore was the landlord and Mr. Love was the tenant.

Now, what did the landlord insure against? It may be said he did not insure against confederate raids. I agree to that. He did not insure against the elements. I agree to that. But I say, the commonest principles of justice require us to say that the landlord did insure against his own deliberate appropriation of that property. It seems to me the doctrine would be monstrous if it were not so. The Government leases the land, encourages the tenant to expend his money in its cultivation, in the purchase of mules, in every way necessary to the cultivation of a crop; and then we are told that the Government making the lease may afterward deliberately appropriate that property and not pay for it. On what principles of equity or justice or law can such a proposition as that be based?

The Senator from New York says it makes no difference whether Mr. Love leased this property from the United States or was the owner of the land. I am not sure that it does; but if it does not make any difference, it is simply because as the owner of the land he would be entitled to pay for his property deliberately appropriated, as this was. The idea that the Government may lease land, encourage the tenant to expend his money, and then by its own act, not in the crash of battle, deprive him of his property without paying for it—it seems to me it is only necessary to state that proposition that it may be rejected.

Let us consider the question now on the supposition that Major Love was the owner of the land. That would weaken the equity somewhat, I confess; but does it weaken the law? Not according to the decision of the Senate, and I think of Congress, upon many occasions. What has been the principle recognized? That where the Government deliberately appropriated the property of a loyal man he was entitled to pay for it; but if it was destroyed in the crash of battle it was otherwise. That was the precise distinction made, if I remember correctly, in the Milton Best case. My colleague will remember how that was. There was a difference of opinion in the Senate on that question. It was my opinion that Best's property was destroyed in the crash of battle, for at the time the appropriation was made the enemy was advancing to occupy the property with his sharp-shooters who had occupied it before, and the property was destroyed in advance of the arrival of the sharp-shooters, when they were already in sight.

Mr. PRATT. My colleague will pardon me for correcting him on a matter of fact.

Mr. MORTON. I have only a general recollection of it.

Mr. PRATT. There are cases before the Senate now, emanating from Paducah, of buildings that were destroyed by order of Colonel Hicks who was in command of the fort. The testimony in the cases was somewhat different. In the case of Mr. West the evidence is that Forrest was on the retreat and that the front of his army was some twenty miles south of Paducah at the time that Colonel Hicks gave the order that the torch should be applied to the buildings that commanded the fort; but in the Milton Best case the testimony was that the attack had ceased the night before about six o'clock, but there was an apprehension on the part of Colonel Hicks that it would be renewed in the morning, and though there was no evidence I believe that the enemy actually appeared advancing upon Paducah in the morning, he had reasons to apprehend that they would renew the attack, and believing that he ordered the torch to be applied.

Mr. MORTON. Was not the attack renewed the next day?

Mr. PRATT. It was not.

Mr. MORTON. Well, it was under the apprehension that the property would be again occupied by the sharp-shooters, as I understand; and therefore it was my opinion when the case was under discussion, and that was I believe the opinion of the President in his veto message, that the property was so destroyed in the crash of battle as to deprive the owner of it of the right to recover. But that case is altogether different from a deliberate act of appropriation where the purpose is to establish a camp for a time, the taking of houses for barracks to be occupied through the winter or for a few weeks. There is a deliberate appropriation of property for which the loyal man has always been held entitled to recover.

In this case, according to the facts stated in this report, there was a deliberate appropriation of this property not in the crash of battle nor in military operations, but a deliberate appropriation, to use the language of the books as applicable to a case where the owner of property is entitled to recover. Here the Army is landed; an examination is made for a proper place for an encampment; it would seem that it was an encampment for a time, because the camp was improved; and the order issued by the commanding officer shows that it was intended to protect the right of the party. I will read that order:

[Special Orders No. 19.]

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES FORCES,
Mouth of White River, Arkansas, September 8, 1864.

3. There being no ground in this vicinity suitable for an encampment, excepting this field of growing cotton, claimed as private property by Major Hiram W. Love, the troops of this command will at once disembark and go into camp on this aforesaid field, the same being necessary for military purposes.

By order of Brigadier-General E. S. Dennis.

WM. E. KUHN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

That, I think, was in the usual form of certificates that were given intended to protect the right of loyal men whose property was deliberately appropriated. If it had been taken in the crash of battle or in the course of a march, of course that order would not have been given.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to call his attention to the fact that this man Love had made these improvements by his own labor and under a contract with the Government?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir. We are told that this property was not in our lines. It was in our lines, or it could not have been leased. The law was intended to cover property that was abandoned which came within the Federal lines; and although it once had been within the confederate lines, that made no difference. As fast as we recovered a State, that State was as much within our lines as was the city of New York that was never occupied by a confederate force. That makes no kind of difference. The property was within our lines or it could not have been leased. The law was intended to cover property that was within our lines in leasing it, and when it was occupied by the Army, of course it was within our lines.

Mr. President, it has been said that the claim filed in this case was extravagant. That is very probable; but I deny the doctrine that has been advanced here that because it was extravagant the claimant forfeited his right to recover at all. Whether the affidavit was made out, as remarked by the Senator from Pennsylvania, under the instruction of a lawyer or not, whether the affidavit is true or false, if he had a legal right to recover, that was not forfeited by any improper statements in the affidavit. I beg leave to suggest in that connection that in all probability the cultivation of this plantation cost Major Love twice or three times as much as it would have cost a southern man who was familiar with the cultivation of cotton. I expect he had everything to take there; he found everything gone; he had to bring there his mules, his hands, those that he employed, his utensils; in all probability war had done there what it does in other places. He had to take those things there, and he had to pay much higher prices than now are ordinarily paid for similar animals, utensils, and labor. These things perhaps ought to be taken into consideration. But, as I said before, I am not concerned about the amount. It is simply a question of the right to recover something. Here is a case where the landlord deliberately appropriates the property of his own tenant, and we are told that tenant has no right to recover anything. I do not agree to that doctrine at all.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I believe for the first time in my connection with the Committee on Claims I have been found differing with them as to the amount. I believe usually I have been under rather than above their estimate. I believed in this case, and still believe, that this party is entitled to more than the $5,000 they report. However, as I have often said here, I believe in reaching practical results rather than controverting over matters that are immaterial or where there is no probability of reaching the result I desire. For the purpose of getting the question before the Senate and having it decided, thinking it better this case were got out of the way, I withdraw my amendment and ask my friend from South Carolina to withdraw his motion, and let us vote at once on the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. OGLESBY in the chair.) The Senator from Iowa withdraws his amendment.

Mr. ROBERTSON. That I may not be misunderstood in cases like this, I wish to say that I am clearly in favor of paying loyal claimants a reasonable amount of compensation for their losses sustained during the war; but when an itemized bill like this, so exorbitant, presents itself, I am opposed to paying the claimants anything. I, however, withdraw my motion to indefinitely postpone to allow a vote to be taken on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina withdraws his motion to indefinitely postpone the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope now we shall be permitted to vote on the bill. I shall ask that it may be laid aside if it gives rise to further debate, so that we may proceed with other cases. I do not wish to consume the afternoon with this case, for there are others to be considered which will be objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing before the Senate except the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I hope we shall have a vote on the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. As I think the original allowance by the committee was extravagant, I should be glad to see the bill referred back to the committee for re-examination. I am informed that the amount of land cultivated was eighty-eight acres. Am I correct?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I find on examination that the committee has allowed this claimant $56.80 per acre for the cultivation of that land until September, if that was the date. I also find that the cost of cultivating cotton is just about one-third more than the cost of cultivating corn. The citizens of Indiana, Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan know about the cost of the cultivation of corn; and I venture to say that there is not a farmer or a granger or a man who cultivates the soil in Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, or Michigan who would not be delighted to get one-fourth less than is allowed after his crop has been gathered.

Now, it must be apparent to every man within the sound of my voice that the amount allowed by the committee is perfectly extravagant; and yet although it is thus extravagant, the Senator from Iowa offered an amendment which would have carried the allowance made to this man to $227.20 an acre for cultivating that cotton from the 1st of May to the 1st of September. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa—I am glad he has withdrawn his amendment, whether his constituents in Iowa, whether men in Michigan—would consider that a reasonable amount for the cultivation of three, five, or ten acres of ground. But the Senator has withdrawn his proposition; and, sir, I wish to refer the bill back for revision. I want to know the cost of cultivating eighty-eight acres of cotton in that locality, and I want the committee to re-examine their figures and to bring in a reasonable compensation and not an unreasonable compensation for the cultivation of those eighty-eight acres of cotton. I am told by my honorable friend from Texas, [Mr. HAMILTON,] who has been engaged his life-time in the cultivation of cotton, that it costs more than one-third more to cultivate cotton than it does to cultivate corn; and yet this crop was not made, this cotton was liable to the worm, to the frost, to the drought; it had to be picked. The allowance is absolutely extravagant and ought not to be made; and I therefore move that this report be recommitted to the Committee on Claims for re-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I shall vote against this bill, and I desire very briefly to state the ground upon which I shall do so.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] draws a distinction between property destroyed in what he calls the crash of battle and this case. I can see none whatever. What is the reason that the Government is not responsible for property destroyed in the crash of battle? It is that the Government is about its lawful business, and that this destruction of property is a necessary consequence of a lawful act on the part of the Government in defense of itself and in defense of its citizens. That is the reason, and the only reason, why the Government is not liable for property destroyed in battle.

Now, are not all the incidents of a campaign covered by the same principle as the battle-field? Are the fields that are injured by the march of troops to reach a battle-field to be compensated and only the battle-field have immunity from compensation? It is as necessary to have camps as battle-fields. You cannot have battle-fields without having previously had camps and marches and all the conveniences and incidents which enable an Army to reach the battle-field. Is not the Government as much engaged in its lawful business and within the scope of its necessary duty in marching troops and in halting them, if the contingencies of the war require a halt for one day or two or three? This was property occupied during a campaign, as I understand. I say that holding land a week or a month for a camp in the prosecution of a campaign falls within precisely the same principle as the battle-field. It is all a part of the same thing; it rests upon the same principle; and the one principle that covers both cases is that the damage necessarily results from the Government performing its necessary duty, the duty which it owes to that owner as much as to every other citizen of the Government and to its own existence.

The idea that we were to send out the Secretary of War, in 1862, 1863, and 1864, to desolate that country, and are to send the Secretary of the Treasury after him in 1873, 1874, and 1875 to rebuild it, is a doctrine which does not meet my approbation; it does not square in any sense with my view of the duty of the Government toward its citizens; and these bills in these special and exceptional cases for small amounts do not meet my approval. But I think (and here I differ totally with my honorable friend from Michigan) that the committee have done splendidly here. They have compromised a claim for $130,000 for $5,000. I cannot expect the committee to do better than that. If there is anything in the claim, there ought to be $5,000 in it. I would give $5,000 or nothing on a $130,000 claim. The Senator from New York suggests that it is just the salary of a Senator. Certainly this man ought to have a Senator's salary for a year. But I can see no principle upon which this Government can be held liable that will not apply to every field over which our Army marched, to every place that they were encamped, to every damage necessarily resulting from the legitimate and necessary operations of actual war; and the march and the camp are as much of that class as the battle-field itself.

For one I do not propose to vote to open the Treasury of the United States to these claims at all. I have never supported any one that came within any of the principles which ought to control and govern this case, and I never shall; and therefore I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. ALCORN. I do not wish, Mr. President, to be misunderstood in regard to the attitude I hold in relation to this bill. I claim that the Government owed protection to this citizen, but certainly the Government owed no greater protection to him, no more protection to him than it owed to a citizen of the Southern States who was loyal to the Government of the United States. Can it be held that the Government owed any greater or higher obligation to that citizen who went voluntarily into the Southern States, and cast his fortunes with the people inside the confederate lines, than it owed to that citizen who involuntarily had his abode inside the confederate lines, who was holding out his hands to the Government and asking protection all the while? Certainly the Government could owe him no greater protection; and now I ask the Committee on Claims whether they can point to a single precedent, whether they can show me a single case in which the Government of the United States has undertaken to make itself liable for the emblements upon any plantation in any of the Southern States belonging to and being owned by any citizen in the South? The Government never has assumed, as I understand, to pay for emblements, the grain, the cereals, the growth upon the ground that was destroyed in the act of war. I do not think it has ever been asked by any one here that they should be paid for even to loyal southern people; and I recognize the distinction; I admit the duty of the Government to its loyal citizens as contradistinguished from any obligations that belong to or were due to the people that were disloyal.

I hold this citizen, Major Love, when he was inside of the confederate lines, or when he cultivated this cotton plantation in the South, to be in precisely the attitude of a loyal citizen of the United States living in the State of Arkansas. His position was no better and no worse. I ask the committee whether they have in any case entertained a proposition for payment for the destruction of emblements on any plantation in the Southern States? The loyal people there have asked that their quartermaster stores consumed by the Army, provisions, corn, meat, mules, should be paid for; but up to this time the Government has not made compensation to the loyal men of the Southern States for even quartermaster stores, although the Government has recognized its obligation to do so. Certainly the loyal citizen is entitled to the protection of the Government, and if his property is destroyed by the Army he is entitled to compensation, but he is only entitled to protection or payment for that property which in its nature is tangible and the price and value of which can be fixed. The price and value of emblements cannot be fixed. It is dependent upon contingencies, as to whether the profits will be great or small, or whether they will be anything whatever.

I attacked this bill, and several of us here look with suspicion upon the bill, for the reason that we thought the charges enormous. Here was a party asking the Government to make compensation for losses sustained by him, and he charged for overseers' services on eighty-eight acres of land over $6,000 in money. But eight hands were necessary to the cultivation of the land, and to oversee those eight hands he charges $6,000 in money. It is an imputation upon the negroes of the South that it required $6,000 in overseers' wages to induce eight negroes to perform the work necessary to cultivate eighty-eight acres of land, and I defend to-day the colored men of the South against the imputation that this charge for overseers' wages brings upon him.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is now about four o'clock. We are not to meet to-morrow. There are other Senators I suppose who still want to participate in this debate. I think it will keep; I think on the whole we had better bottle it up and preserve it, and keep it as a specimen case; and for that reason and others I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the question the Chair will dispose of business on his table.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Attorney-General, transmitting a copy of a communication from the United States attorney for the district of West Virginia, in relation to the sale of Government property at Harper's Ferry, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 3265) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873, and 1874, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3350) for the relief of Norman Wiard.

ADDITIONAL REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask leave to make a report at this time. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, have directed me to report it back with sundry amendments; and in this connection I give notice to the Senate that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Public Lands submitted, a report to accompany the bill (S. No. 654) to extend the time for the completion of a railroad from Saint Croix River or Lake, between townships 25 and 31, to the west end of Lake Superior and to Bayfield, in the State of Wisconsin, reported by him on the 1st instant with an amendment; which was ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873, and 1874, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 3265) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 3350) for the relief of Norman Wiard was read twice by its title.

Mr. FENTON. That bill has been before the Committee on Military Affairs heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to that committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That claim is so old a customer in both Houses, that it ought to go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FENTON. I stated the fact that it was before the Committee on Military Affairs at the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FENTON. I have no choice in the matter. I understand the same subject is before the Committee on Military Affairs now. It is under consideration there, and so I think it is better to have the bill go to that committee, as they are investigating the question already. It was before them at the last session, and was reported upon by them.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is a claim, and I think comes within the jurisdiction of the Claims Committee

Mr. FENTON. It relates entirely to a military matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it is a claim for money.

Mr. FENTON. I only state the fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be considered as referred to the Committee on Claims unless a vote be demanded. It is so referred.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 15, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. A. MACLEAN of New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PAYMENT OF TREASURY CERTIFICATE.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3238) making an appropriation for the payment of Treasury certificate No. 496653, and move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar and that the accompanying report be printed. The Committee on Appropriations were entirely satisfied as to the justice of this claim. Our committee did not think that we were exactly the committee to which it ought to have gone, but they have instructed me to report it to the House that it may be placed on the Private Calendar, and to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Claims to that fact.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to be allowed five minutes for a personal explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. A few days ago I made a speech on Indian affairs, and in the course of that speech I made some remarks on the Sand Creek massacre in the Territory of Colorado. I have had a paper sent to me from Denver, Colorado—the Daily News—in which I find this statement referring to the remarks I then made:

This is about the worst lie in history, and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE should "blush" for giving currency to such a grossly perverted statement of facts. There was never a more justifiable occurrence than the battle of Sand Creek. The principal trouble with the Indian question is that there has never been enough of them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I made no misstatement of facts in that speech. I endeavored to confine myself closely to a statement of facts as they appear in the history of the country. And to show that I was right I refer to a report, from which I read the following extract:

Wyncoop then ordered the Indians to move their villages nearer to the fort, and bring their women and children, which was done. In November this officer was removed, and Major Anthony, of the First Colorado Cavalry, ordered to take command of the fort. He, too, assured the Indians of safety. They numbered about five hundred men, women, and children. It was here, and under the pledge of protection, they were slaughtered by the Third Colorado and a battalion of the First Colorado Cavalry under command of Colonel Chivington. He marched from Denver to Fort Lyon, and about daylight in the morning of the 29th of November surrounded the Indian camp and commenced an indiscriminate slaughter. The particulars of this massacre are too well known to be repeated here, with all its heart-rending scenes. It is enough to say that it scarcely has its parallel in the records of Indian barbarity. Fleeing women, holding up their hands and praying for mercy, were brutally shot down; infants were killed and scalped in derision; men were tortured and mutilated in a manner that would put to shame the savage in genuity of interior Africa.

I have read, sir, from a report made and signed by N. G. Taylor, Commissioner of Indian Affairs; Senator J. B. Henderson, of Missouri; Lieutenant-General W. T. Sherman; Brevet Major-General William S. Harney, John B. Sanborn, Brevet Major-General Alfred H. Terry, S. F. Tappan, and Brevet Major-General C. C. Augur.

I have here, sir, also the report of the Senate committee sent out to examine into that affair. They examined about forty witnesses, some of whom were present at the massacre. I read from their report. Among those who signed it are Senator Doolittle, of Wisconsin, chairman of the committee, and the gentleman who now represents in this House the State of Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH.] The report says:

The indiscriminate slaughter of men, women, and children has frequently occurred in the history of Indian wars. But the fact which gives such terrible force to the condemnation of the wholesale massacre of Arapahoes and Cheyennes by the Colorado troops under Colonel Chivington, near Fort Lyon, was that those Indians were then encamped there under the direction of our own officers, and believed themselves to be under the protection of our flag. A full account of this bloody affair will be found also in the appendix. To the honor of the Government it may be said that a just atonement for this violation of its faith was sought to be made in the late treaty with these tribes.

I desire, also, to have incorporated in my remarks the report of Major Wyncoop, in command at that time of that department. It is as follows:

FORT LYON, COLORADO TERRITORY,
January 16, 1865.

From evidence of officers at this post, I understand that on the 28th day of November, 1864, Colonel J. M. Chivington, with the Third Regiment of Colorado Cavalry, (one hundred day men,) and a battalion of the First Colorado Cavalry arrived at this post, ordered a portion of the garrison to join him, under the command of Major Scott J. Anthony, against the remonstrances of the officers of the post, who stated circumstances of which he was well aware, attacked the camp of friendly Indians, the major portion of which were composed of women and children. The affidavits which became a portion of this report will show more particulars of that massacre; any one whom I have spoken to, whether officers or soldiers, agrees in the relation that the most fearful atrocities were committed that were ever heard of; women and children were killed and scalped, children shot at their mothers' breast, and all the bodies mutilated in the most horrible manner. Numerous eye-witnesses have described scenes to me, coming under the notice of Colonel Chivington, of the most disgusting and horrible character, the dead bodies of females profaned in such a manner that the recital is sickening; Colonel J. M. Chivington all the time inciting his troops to these diabolical outrages. Previous to the slaughter commencing he addressed his command, arousing in them, by his language, all their worst passions, urging them on to the work of committing all these diabolical outrages;

knowing himself all the circumstances of these Indians resting on the assurances of protection from the Government given them by myself and Major S. J. Anthony, he kept his command in entire ignorance of the same, and when it was suggested that such might be the case, he denied it positively, stating that they were still continuing their depredations and lay there threatening the fort. I beg leave to draw the attention of the colonel commanding to the fact, established by the inclosed affidavits, that two-thirds or more of that Indian village were women and children. I desire also to state that Colonel J. M. Chivington is not my superior officer, but is a citizen mustered out of the United States service, and also to the time this inhuman monster committed this unprecedented atrocity he was a citizen by reason of his term of service having expired, he having lost his regulation command some months previous. Colonel Chivington reports officially that between five and six hundred Indians were left dead upon the field. I have been informed by Captain Booth, district inspector, that he visited the field and counted but sixty-nine bodies, and by others who were present, but that few, if any, over that number were killed, and that two-thirds of them were women and children. I beg leave to further state, for the information of the colonel commanding, that I talked to every officer in Fort Lyon and many enlisted men, and that they unanimously agree that all the statements I have made in this report are correct. In conclusion allow me to say, that from the time I held the consultation with the Indian chiefs, on the head-waters of Smoky Hill up to the date of the massacre by Colonel Chivington, not one single depredation had been committed by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians; the settlers of the Arkansas Valley had returned to their camps and had been resting in perfect security, under assurances from myself that they would be in no danger for the present; by that means saving the country from what must inevitably become a famine were they to lose their crops; the lines of communication to the States were opened, and travel across the plains rendered perfectly safe through the Cheyenne and Arapaho country. Since this last horrible murder by Chivington the country presents a scene of desolation; all communication is cut off from the States, except by sending large bodies of troops, and already over a hundred whites have fallen as victims to the fearful vengance of these betrayed Indians. All this country is ruined; there can be no such thing as peace in the future, but by the total annihilation of all these Indians on the plains. I have most reliable information to the effect that the Cheyennes and Arapahoes have allied themselves with the Kiowas, Comanches, and Sioux, and are congregated to the number of —— thousand on the Smoky Hill. Let me also draw the attention of the colonel commanding to the fact stated by the affidavits, that John Smith, United States interpreter, a soldier, and citizen, were presented in the Indian camp, by permission of the commanding officer of this camp; another evidence to the fact of the same Indians being regarded as friendly Indians. Also, that Colonel Chivington states in his official report that he fought from nine hundred to one thousand Indians, and left from five to six hundred dead upon the field; the sworn evidence being that there were but five hundred souls in the village, two-thirds of them being women and children, and that there were but from sixty to seventy killed, the major portion of whom were women and children. It will take many more troops to give security to the travelers and settlers in this country and to make any kind of successful warfare against the Indians. I am at work placing Fort Lyon in a state of defense, having all, both citizens and soldiers, located here employed upon the works, and expect to have them soon completed, and of such a nature that a comparatively small garrison can hold the fort against any attack by Indians. Hoping that my report may receive the particular attention of the colonel commanding, I respectfully submit the same.

Your obedient servant

E. W. WYNKOOP,
Major, Commanding First Veteran Cavalry and Fort Lyon, Colorado Territory.

Lieutenant J. E. TAPPAN,
Acting Assistant Adjutant General, District of Upper Arkansas.

I submit also the following testimony:

ROBERT BENT sworn.

I am twenty-four years old; was born on the Arkansas River. I am pretty well acquainted with the Indians of the plains, having spent most of my life among them. I was employed as guide and interpreter at Fort Lyon by Major Anthony. Colonel Chivington ordered me to accompany him on his way to Sand Creek. The command consisted of from nine hundred to one thousand men, principally Colorado volunteers. We left Fort Lyon at eight o'clock in the evening and came on to the Indian camp at daylight the next morning. Colonel Chivington surrounded the village with his troops. When we came in sight of the camp I saw the American flag waving and heard Black Kettle tell the Indians to stand round the flag, and there they were huddled, men, women, and children. This was when we were within fifty yards of the Indians. I also saw a white flag raised. These flags were in so conspicuous a position that they must have been seen. When the troops fired the Indians ran; some of the men into their lodges, probably to get their arms. They had time to get away if they had wanted to. I remained on the field five hours, and when I left there were shots being fired up the creek. I think there were six hundred Indians in all. I think there were thirty-five braves and some old men, about sixty in all. All fought well. At the time the rest of the men were away from camp hunting. I visited the battle-ground one month afterward; saw the remains of a good many; counted sixty-nine, but a number had been eaten by the wolves and dogs. After the firing the warriors put the squaws and the children together and surrounded them to protect them. I saw five squaws under a bank for shelter. When the troops came up to them they ran out and showed their persons to let the soldiers know they were squaws, and begged for mercy, but the soldiers shot them all. I saw one squaw lying on the bank whose leg had been broken by a shell; a soldier came up to her with a drawn saber; she raised her arm to protect herself, when he struck, breaking her arm; she rolled over and raised her other arm, when he struck, breaking it, and then left her without killing her. There seemed to be an indiscriminate slaughter of men, women, and children. There were some thirty or forty squaws collected in a hole for protection. They sent out a little girl about six years old with a white flag on a stick. She had not proceeded but a few steps when she was shot and killed. All the squaws in that hole were afterward killed, and four or five bucks outside. The squaws offered no resistance. Every one I saw dead was scalped. I saw one squaw cut open, with an unborn child, as I thought, lying by her side. Captain Soule afterward told me that such was the fact. I heard Colonel Chivington say to the soldiers as they charged past him, "Remember our wives and children murdered on the Platte and Arkansas." He occupied a position where he could not have failed to have seen the American flag, which, I think, was a garrison flag six by twelve. He was within fifty yards when he planted his battery. I saw a little girl about five years of age, who had been hid in the sand. Two soldiers discovered her, drew their pistols and shot her, and then pulled her out of the sand by the arm. I saw quite a number of infants in arms killed with their mothers. There were trading in the village at the time John Smith, a soldier named Louderback, and a teamster of Yancey Colley's named Clark. They were trading goods said to belong to Dexter Colley and John Smith. The goods traded were similar to those they had been in the habit of trading before. I have heard the Indians charge Major Colley with trading their own goods to them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have noticed this newspaper article simply to repel the charge there made that I had given a false version of that unfortunate and disgraceful affair, the occurrence of which I have no doubt the large majority of the good people of Colorado deeply regret. I gave in my speech a true statement of facts, and I am fully sustained and more than sustained by the most incontestible evidence.

I made no charge against the people of Colorado. They are a high-minded, honorable, generous people, and I have too high an appreciation of them to believe for a moment that the statement of this editor, applauding and defending the butchery of women and children in cold blood, will meet their indorsement. But whether I am mistaken in that or not, I have vindicated the truth of history.

Mr. BROMBERG. I desire simply to correct some inaccuracies in the proceedings of yesterday with regard to some statements that I made. Speaking of the attorney (W. W. D. Turner) of Mr. Woodward, I said: "Lest some may think he is a democrat who would strike at the bank, I will say that he has been city attorney during a late republican administration, was candidate of the republican party at the last election for county solicitor, and is president of the republican central council of Mobile to-day."

Speaking of the suit said to have been begun, I said that the statement that, by forcing the bank into the hands of a receiver and immediate settlement, I was seeking to avoid a responsibility created by a bond carried with it its own refutation by its preposterousness.

And, further, that the name I bore was "probably as well known in Wall street, New York, as that of the gentleman, [Mr. MERRIAM,] to be good for whatever it is written against."

Answering the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] I stated that my denial did not include the fact of the bond.

I should have stated that Mr. Woodward resigned his Bureau agency in 1869, instead of being appointed in that year.

Mr. MERRIAM. I will simply say to the gentleman that I could see no occasion for referring to the value of my name in New York. My name has not been in Wall street for twelve years, and I do not see that it had any connection with this matter at all. If the gentleman's name were good for one hundred millions it would make no difference.

Mr. BROMBERG. All I desired was to make the corrections which I have stated.

REORGANIZATION OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I give notice that on Monday next, after the morning hour, I shall ask a suspension of the rules, to take into consideration the bill (H. R. No. 1060) for the reorganization of the clerical force in the General Land Office, and I will state that there is connected therewith a report, Miscellaneous Document No. 251, to which I wish to call the attention of members of the House.

REPORT ON CUSTOMS TARIFFS, ETC.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the special report of Edward Young, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, on customs and tariff legislation of the United States, with the appendices including the tariff acts approved respectively May 1, 1872, and June 6, 1872, and a tabular statement of the rates of duties under said acts and other statutes now in force, five thousand copies; three thousand for the House of Representatives, one thousand for the Senate, and one thousand bound for the use of and distributien by the Treasury Department.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I would inquire, what is the necessity of printing this report when we are just having a revision of all the statutes to bring them together in one volume?

Mr. DONNAN. This is a most convenient compilation of the customs tariffs, running back and giving each separate act by itself. Every member of the House will want more copies than this resolution provides for.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I only desired to call attention to the fact that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws have brought into one volume all of the public statutes, and of course all of the laws on this subject. It is supposed that that bill will pass both Houses during this session, and then all the laws will be printed in one volume so that they will be accessible to every one.

Mr. BURCHARD. This report contains not only a compilation of the laws, but a history of tariff legislation.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. DONNAN also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it be concurred in, the following concurrent resolution from the Senate:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That seventy-five hundred additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1873 be printed for the use of the institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does that resolution propose to give all the copies to the Smithsonian Institution?

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to say to the House that this resolution proposes five thousand less than the usual number of copies; but we make no provision for furnishing any copies to members of Congress. The whole number is for the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that there ought to be some copies for members of Congress. I think it would be fair, not to increase the number, but to divide it up so that a portion shall be distributed by Senators and members of the House.

Mr. DONNAN. This is a Senate resolution and it was believed inasmuch as members of Congress have no means of distributing the documents that they could obtain such copies as they desired for their own use from the institution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it would be better to have a small number provided for members of Congress. Most of us are perfectly willing to send them to our constituents. I think one-third of the number should be furnished for the use of members of Congress. What is the number which the resolution proposes to have printed?

Mr. DONNAN. Seventy-five hundred for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Seventy-five hundred all together?

Mr. DONNAN. Yes; and the usual number was twelve thousand.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I would move to amend the resolution so that three thousand copies shall be furnished to the Senate and House; two thousand for the House, and one thousand for the Senate, and that the remaining forty-five hundred shall be for the institution.

Mr. DONNAN. I have no objection to the House voting on that amendment.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I did not understand whether the motion of the gentleman from Indiana was to add to the number.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; but to divide the number proposed so as to give a portion to the Senate and to the House.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I desire to say that this number is only what the Smithsonian Institution desires for distribution according to its system among the libraries and colleges of the country, and for its exchanges. I do not think it would be proper or wise for the House to take away a part of the ordinary number furnished to this institution, for the purpose of distributing this document to favored constituents of members of the House. If members desires copies for distribution, I think they should add to and not diminish the regular supply to the institution. I move to amend the amendment so that the number proposed for the House and Senate shall be in addition to the number proposed by the resolution.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. DONNAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order; privileged reports from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CONGER. I had supposed that the Committee on Printing were through with their reports.

PUBLICATION OF DEBATES.

Mr. DONNAN. I submit a further privileged report. The Committee on Printing have instructed me to report the accompanying Senate resolution and to recommend the following amendment, and, as so amended, submit the resolution for the consideration of the House.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That it shall not be lawful for the Congressional Printer to publish in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD any speech or portion of a speech not actually delivered in the Senate or House of Representatives.

The amendment was to add to the resolution the following:

Nor shall it be lawful for any member of either House of Congress to speak longer than one hour upon any subject under consideration, any agreement or consent to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DONNAN] to allow to be read that clause of the Constitution authorizing each House to make its own rules.

Mr. DONNAN. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Senators number only about one-fourth as many as the members of the House of Representatives. They have in that body no previous question, and consequently debate there is practically unlimited. It is claimed that this resolution is in the interest of economy, providing that nothing whatever shall be printed as having been delivered in either House unless actually so delivered. The House Committee on Printing think that if this resolution is in the interest of economy, we should go a step further and provide that members of either House of Congress, instead of getting the floor and having the privilege of talking two or three or four hours at a time, shall be compelled to so compact their arguments as to bring them within the limits of one hour, and by that means we will economize more than by the other means.

In regard to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that the Constitution authorizes each House to make its own rules, that is true. But the Committee on Printing desire to place this resolution precisely on a par with the question of adopting resolutions providing for the printing of an extra number of documents. Undoubtedly each House of Congress has full authority to establish as a rule that they may suspend their rules and pass any resolution for the printing of extra documents or anything else. Yet ever since 1852, by an enactment of Congress, no resolution whatever for the printing of extra documents can be agreed to by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules, or can be considered even, until it has first been referred to the Committee on Printing. In the judgment of the committee this resolution stands precisely on a par with the other. If this shall become a law, so long as it shall remain unrepealed it will stand as a binding agreement upon the two Houses, and would be operative.

I propose to call the previous question, and then I will yield for debate if desired.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a few moments?

Mr. DONNAN. I will yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. HALE, of New York] for five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask for the reading of the rule under which the Committee on Printing are authorized to report.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order that this is not a privileged report by the rules of the House.

Mr. DONNAN. The point of order comes too late; the resolution has been discussed at some length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] raises the point of order that this is not a privileged report. Upon what ground is it not privileged?

Mr. CONGER. Upon the ground that it does not relate to and is not a proper subject of printing.

The SPEAKER. It relates to the mode of printing the debates of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. And it proposes an amendment to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. It does not relate to the mode of printing, but it relates to the rules of the two Houses in regard to the time of debate.

The SPEAKER. The amendment may be open to the point of order. But the original resolution, as it comes from the Senate, proposes to instruct the Congressional Printer in regard to printing the debates, directing him to exclude therefrom all speeches or portions of speeches not actually delivered. The Chair thinks that it is a privileged report. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DONNAN] does not desire to interfere with private bills, and may, by consent, allow this resolution to go over.

Mr. CONGER. Then I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The point of order would not be well taken after allowing the gentleman from Iowa to discuss the resolution and amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will remember that I called for the regular order, and the Chair in advance stated that this was a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so still.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It is whether it would not be competent for the House, if a majority so desire, to adopt this proposed amendment to the amendment of the Senate, and then non-concur in the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. That is, to agree to the amendment of the committee, and then disagree to the resolution as amended?

Mr. MAYNARD. I misapprehended the attitude of it. I understood it came here as a Senate amendment to a House resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Senate propose there shall not be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD any speech or part of a speech not actually delivered in either House. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN,] in behalf of the Printing Committee, proposes to amend by saying no speech in either House shall exceed one hour.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is not that proposition a Senate amendment to one from the House?

The SPEAKER. No; it is an original proposition which comes here from the Senate, and the Committee on Printing move to amend as I have indicated. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DONNAN. I yield for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] my colleague on the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I asked some time ago that the rule be read under which the committee have authority to make these reports.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire if it be in order to move to lay this subject upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It would not while the gentleman from Iowa has the floor; it would otherwise.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman has yielded the floor to his colleague on the committee.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield to me.

Mr. DONNAN. I have yielded for five minutes to the gentleman from New York, my colleague on the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understood the gentleman from Michigan made the point of order as to whether this was a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair overruled it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does the Chair hold that it is in order to make this report to-day?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must not confuse the amendment with the original resolution. The original resolution of the Senate proposes a certain regulation in regard to the printing of the debates of Congress. That is a privileged report of the Committee on Printing. Whether the amendment is germane thereto is another question.

The Chair must have ruled one way or the other if raised in season. The original resolution from the Senate is clearly a question of privilege within the privilege granted to the committee to report at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I wish to say why I feel anxious about it and desire to make an explanation——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois has a right, while I have the floor, to explain the reasons for his action or to indulge in other debate.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does the gentleman say I have no right to make a point of order?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I did not understand him to say he is making a point of order, but an explanation.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The Chair recognized me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on a point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I was doing nothing but making a point of order, and now the gentleman from New York says I have no right to make a point of order.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I have not heard the gentleman's point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the point of order.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I supposed I had the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Have I not the floor when I rise to a question of order?

Mr. HALE, of New York. If the gentleman rises to a point of order that must be settled first of course.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. For that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor if no point be raised.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I beg to apologize to the gentleman from Illinois if he supposed I interfered with him. I did not understand him to raise the point of order, but to make a short speech.

I ask the attention of the House for a few minutes to explain precisely the condition of the question and the action of the Committee on Printing. This House received from the Senate a concurrent resolution providing that no speech should hereafter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD except delivered on the floor of either House; in other words, doing away with the practice which prevailed in the House of granting leave to print. I may say, I think without impropriety, the Committee on Printing were unanimous in the report that this was such a limitation of the practice of this House as the House would not be disposed to countenance, and the majority of the committee were of the opinion the best way of dealing with it was the method they adopted of attaching the further proviso so as to equalize in some respects the practice between the two Houses, by providing no speech hereafter to be delivered shall exceed an hour in length. In pursuance of that this has been reported by the Committee on Printing.

If the House should pass the resolution, I trust it will be passed with this amendment, and with nothing else attached. I hope that the amendment will be adopted at any rate, and then the question of concurrence or non-concurrence in the resolution can be passed on. I say very frankly for one that after the adoption of the amendment I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. DONNAN. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and then I give notice that I shall call the previous question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I never believed in the previous question or in the hour rule. I believe we should do more business without either. But it seems to me that under the ruling of our Speaker (and he always rules correctly) all this matter is within his charge. The other day when a member from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] made the point that it would be decorous to omit from our official reports such parenthetical expressions as "laughter," "sensation," "applause on the floor," or "applause in the galleries," the Speaker took command of the RECORD, and ruled that no such expression should appear in the reports. If he can do that, why may he not limit the printing of our debates in the same way. The French, the English, and most all other parliamentary bodies which debate, record everything that transpires in their legislative bodies in order that the people may know whether the members are or are not decorous. No Speaker or member decides it in advance. Therefore I think that the honored Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, might very well make another order at the instance of some other and more gifted gentleman from Massachusetts, (perhaps General BUTLER,) so that we may have correct reports of our most genial proceedings. I notice that the Speaker does not smile with reference to this matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will gladly do so if it will oblige the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. And as the Speaker does not smile there can be no record made (as now he smiles) on the subject. But I do think he was hasty in the order which he made. I hope he will retrace his steps, and give those innocent, simple-hearted members of Congress who try at times to enliven our records by something vivacious, a little chance to be heard by the people.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Heard and known.

Mr. COX. Yes, sir; heard and known by the people. There is a class of members in this House who

> Wisely rest content with sober sense,
> Nor make to dangerous wit a vain pretense.

I am one of the hard, close, common-sense business members. I believe in speaking what is ordinarily called "gumption," for the reading of plain American people; but I do not want these "gay and festive" members from Massachusetts, like the gentleman [Mr. G. F. HOAR] who suggested this order, to be so reported as not to be known by the people for what they are. Therefore, sir, when the Senate sends us a resolution of this kind, let the Speaker make the order as he did in the other case, and open our records to the fullest debate and report.

The SPEAKER. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is instituted to contain the proceedings of Congress. The Chair thinks that applause on the floor, which is strictly forbidden in the rules, and applause in the galleries, which is so strictly forbidden that the Speaker is authorized to clear the galleries if it occurs, do not properly come within the category of "proceedings" of the House under the rules. Therefore the Chair has ordered that the RECORD shall conform to the rule. The Chair has not made the rule; he has simply ordered that the Official Reporters shall conform to it. If the gentleman from New York is aggrieved by it, or if his proceedings are in any way restricted, the Chair regrets it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, we know that the Chair sometimes indulges in a little irrelevant remark, which occasionally takes the character of debate, according to my colleague, [Mr. POTTER.] But if the Chair will read a rule drawn from the English Parliament, which is in Barclay's Digest, he will find that we are authorized here sometimes to make the most inordinate "noises," to resort to what otherwise might be regarded as the most disgraceful proceedings in order to stop debate.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman say that that can be done within the rules of the House?

Mr. COX. There is such a rule published in Barclay's Digest, though I cannot make the precise reference to it at this exciting moment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will point it out, the Chair will be glad to have it read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COX. I shall be glad to look it up at my leisure.*

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad if the gentleman would stop right here and verify, if he can, his reference to the rule.

Mr. COX. I remember that it was quoted some years ago during the debate on the admission of Cabinet officers to the floor of the House. It is probably not in the rules proper, but in the first part of the Digest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not such familiarity with the rules as to be able to refer to the point suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. COX. The Chair can look over the index at his leisure and pleasure. The Chair knows very well that in the English Parliament it is the rule when the member on the floor is distasteful to the House to shuffle him down, to cough him down, or, as Tittlebat Titmouse did when he upset an administration, to crow him down; and that same rule is bound up somewhere in our Digest. I will find it at my leisure. I do not intend to be hurried now in my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is a rule applicable to the proceedings of this House?

Mr. COX. In some degree I think it is. I sometimes wish the Chair to do as they do in the English Parliament, or in the Spanish Cortes, or in the Italian or French Assembly, where the Chair jingles a bell. If the Speaker should bring in the fire-bell on New Jersey avenue, within a short distance of the Capitol, it would hardly be heard in the proceedings of this House at times, but might be more effectual than the gentle gavel.

Mr. ELDREDGE. There is a good deal of ding-dong here, any way.

Mr. COX. And nobody makes such a terrible pull on the bell as the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE.]

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from New York is what I ring when I pull the cord.

Mr. COX. But I do think before we pass on this resolution we should allow our Speaker to take suitable action in respect to the matter I have indicated. If he does not do it, then, perhaps, we may undertake to pass on the Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has exercised no power whatever, except the power which the rules require him to exercise, which is to enforce the rules. And if the gentleman from New York, who is a member of the Committee on the Rules, will have one referred to the committee, and adopted by the House, that all the applause from the galleries, and all disorder on the floor, and all laughter by members, shall be duly recorded in the proceedings, of course it will be the duty of the Official Reporters so to do. But until the rule is changed the Chair will adhere to what is now the rule—that all the proceedings shall be recorded within the rules.

Mr. DONNAN. It will be very much in the interest of economy of public printing to have all such matters as applause and laughter

---

*NOTE BY MR. COX.—Nevertheless, if a member finds that it is not the inclination of the House to hear him, and that by conversation or any other noise they endeavor to drown his voice, it is his most prudent way to submit to the pleasure of the House, and sit down; for it scarcely ever happens that they are guilty of this piece of ill-manners without sufficient reason, or inattentive to a member who says anything worth their hearing. stricken out from the speeches of the gentleman from New York. I demand the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Pending the demand for the previous question, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Rules.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The question being taken on the motion that the resolution be laid on the table, there were—ayes 105, noes 50.

Mr. DONNAN called for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers there were ayes 17; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was ordered to be laid on the table; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes.

CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just received from the Senate (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, be printed with the Senate amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PORTLAND, DALLES AND SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

Mr. BRADLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back the resolutions of a public meeting of the citizens of Portland, Oregon, praying for the passage of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad bill, and also the petition of citizens of Northern Idaho, praying the passage of the said bill; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that they be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the morning hour begins at fifteen minutes before twelve o'clock, and reports of a private nature are in order from the Committee on Patents.

NORMAN WIARD.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3350) for the relief of Norman Wiard; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes Norman Wiard to renew his application to the Commissioner of Patents for letters-patent on his safety attachment for steam-boilers, and authorizes and empowers the Commissioner of Patents to re-examine said application and to grant letters-patent thereon if, in his judgment, the said invention of the said Norman Wiard is a new and useful art, machine, or manufacture, not used by others in this country, and not known or patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, before his invention or discovery thereof; provided, however, that the granting of said letters-patent shall not be held in any way to interfere with the rights of any person or corporation now using said invention to use and enjoy the same.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If there be a report, I hope it will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

This is an application by Norman Wiard for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for letters-patent on an invention of his, designated an "improved safety attachment for steam-boilers."

The petitioner states that he is the discover of an invention that will prevent explosions of steam-boilers by an attachment that prevents the steam from becoming superheated to such a degree as to bring about an explosion.

The petitioner also shows that he has spent a considerable sum of money in experimenting on and perfecting his invention.

It appears from the records of the Patent Office, as well as from the allegations of the petitioner, that he filed his application for letters-patent on his invention on the 20th day of January, A. D. 1870, which was passed for issue February 3, 1870. But through the neglect of his attorney, in whose hands Mr. Wiard had placed the whole matter while he was continuing his experiments, the case was permitted to lie over two years from the date of taking his last action previous to applying for the issuance of the letters, which was done in February, 1873, by Mr. Wiard himself, the last previous action having been in February, 1870.

On this account the Commissioner declined to issue the letters on the ground of abandonment. Mr. Wiard's only fault seems to consist in trusting the matter in the hands of his attorney, who let the matter lie till the Commissioner regarded the delay as working an abandonment; and his excuse for this is that his time and attention were engaged with his constant experiments, and he confided explicitly in his attorney. This invention has not passed into use at all.

The committee are of the opinion that the invention is a valuable one, but one of that peculiar class that requires the skill and knowledge of an expert to bring it into use; and that this will only be done by granting to the inventor letters-patent, so that he can proceed under their protection. They conceive, therefore, that the general welfare will be advanced by permitting the petitioner to renew his application for letters-patent in this case.

They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CLEMENTS] yield to me to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will hear the amendment read.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to go in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor to the right of the United States to make and use the same without any liability to make compensation therefor.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not admit that amendment. If any gentleman wishes any further explanation in regard to the bill, beyond what is contained in the report, I shall be happy to give it so far as in my power.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before yielding to the gentleman from New York, I will state the nature of this invention, so far as I am able to explain it. It is about this: Mr. Wiard has invented a system of pipes that act automatically, whereby when the water in the boiler becomes very much reduced in quantity, and the steam becomes heated to that degree that immediately precedes an explosion, the pressure of the steam forces a stream of cold water through the pipes, the pipes running through the steam. This cold water running through the pipes reduces the temperature of the steam and thereby prevents an explosion. If this be true, if this be the character of the invention, if it will accomplish that, it is certainly valuable. Mr. Wiard has never had a patent for this invention. He made application for one, and that application lay in the Department for two years, while his attorney gave him to understand he was prosecuting the application, and Mr. Wiard in the mean time was engaged in experimenting. When finally he went to get his patent, he found that the two years had elapsed. The law was, and is, that if an application be not prosecuted to final issue within two years, then the Commissioner is not at liberty to grant letters-patent. This bill simply proposes to allow Mr. Wiard, inasmuch as the two years elapsed through the negligence of his counsel, to make application to the Commissioner, and the Commissioner is to examine it as if it were an original application. It merely gives him the privilege of going before the Commissioner and submitting his claim to the inspection of that officer. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the previous question.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the gentleman wishes to say anything upon the other side I will yield to him for five minutes.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I know nothing about the merits of this bill except what appears from the report. The report shows that Norman Wiard in 1870 instituted proceedings according to law to procure a patent for this invention, and that, as he alleges, by the negligence of his attorney, he failed to complete the proceedings within the time fixed by law and thus failed in obtaining his patent.

Now, while I know nothing about the merits of this bill I do happen to know something about the history of Mr. Norman Wiard, and I beg to say to the House that he is a gentleman who is not only an ingenious and meritorious inventor, but an experienced practitioner in the Patent Office, who did not in my opinion fail to complete his proceedings for a patent within the two years allowed by law, on account of any ignorance or mistake on his part. He is a man who has had repeated patents, who is familiar with the practice in the department, and the last man who was likely to let his rights pass by mere oversight in allowing the time to elapse within which he must procure his patent. And not only that, Mr. Norman Wiard has been a claimant against this Government for amounts perfectly fabulous in regard to patents claimed by him and used by the Government.

Mr. LAWRENCE. He is now.

Mr. HALE, of New York. He now has claims to an immense amount pending against the Government.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD. What has that to do with this bill?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I will tell my distinguished friend from Tennessee precisely what it has to do with this bill before I get through if he will not be too impatient. Impatience is apt to be the fault of youth. It has this to do with the bill. Mr. Norman Wiard now asks us to relieve him from the effect of the negligence of his attorney and grant him this patent, which if it is valuable is especially valuable to the United States for its use in its steam navy. I insist that if we give him leave to prosecute his application for a patent and relieve him from the effect of his negligence it should at least be by saving the rights of the United States as I propose to save them in the amendment I have offered. That amendment is simply an addition to the proviso that if the patent be granted it shall not be operative as against the United States, nor lay the foundation for claims against the United States for the use of this invention.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. HALE, of New York. No; the gentleman must excuse me; I do not yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will wait until the gentleman gets through.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I have but five minutes, and the gentleman ought not to interrupt me.

Mr. Speaker, just as certainly as Congress passes this bill as it comes from the committee and Mr. Wiard secures his patent, just so certainly shall we have a claim from Mr. Norman Wiard, not only for tens of thousands but hundreds of thousands of dollars against the United States Government for the use of this patent. I oppose entirely the passage of the bill; but if it is to pass, I hope the House will insist upon attaching to it the amendment which I have offered, and I therefore trust the House will vote down the previous question so as to enable me to offer it.

Mr. EAMES. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. I would like to have the gentleman from New York state to the House the reason why the Government of the United States should not pay when it uses a valuable invention, as any American citizen has to do?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Well, if the Government of the United States, under its general laws, was obligated to make payment to a citizen they ought to do it; but if a citizen who by his own fault or negligence, (because the negligence of the attorney was his negligence,) comes here asking from the United States grace to enable him to take out a patent not in the line of the general law, then I do say that it is not the duty of the United States, or the duty of the members of this House, having in view the interests of the United States, to grant that privilege, that favor, without putting up the bars against a claim against the Government for the very favor which we are asked to grant.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. The position of the gentleman from New York is simply this: that the Government of the United States cannot be just to its own citizens unless it is paid for it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is that the question the gentleman asked me to yield for? It does not sound like a question.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. That is your position.

Mr. HALE, of New York. That is not the fact. I am not opposing justice to any man. But I say it is not the duty of this House, nor is it just or right, to give away this privilege to such a claimant.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. He is simply asking for an act of justice, and you want the Government to be paid for it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Not so.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut. [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I know nothing about this case, except what I have gathered from the report of the committee. I want to say right here, and that is the reason I wished to ask a question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] which he refused to allow, that if an outrageous principle was ever advocated on the floor of this House it is that the Government has the right to take the product of the labor, of the brain-work, of a citizen without paying for it, while other citizens are obliged to pay the inventor for the use of his invention. I say that it is one of the most outrageous proposition ever advocated here or elsewhere. I know the thing has been done. It was done all through the war, because the Government by its strong arm had the power to take the invention of a man and use it; it did it because it had the power, and it was a necessity that it should be done. And to-day there are several inventors who, to my knowledge, are suffering for the want of the money which the Government ought to pay them for their inventions used during the war by the Government, and pay for which is refused by the Government. Though the Government from its necessity was justifiable in using all inventions necessary to protect its existence then it is not justifiable in refusing just compensation for it now.

I will say further that, so far as this bill is concerned, I do not think it is good taste on the part of the gentleman from New York or any other member to lug in any other claim which this person has before the House to prejudice this or that claim. If the gentleman who claims to be the inventor in this case has any other claim pending here, then for God's sake let us take it up and dispose of it upon its merits when the bill comes up, and not seek to prejudice this claim or that by saying that he has other claims. I know nothing about this case. But I know that if any wrong has been done by the Government during the last ten years it is in the constant practice during the war of taking the brain-work, the inventions of its citizens, without paying for it, while its own citizens have to pay for the use of an invention during the existence of a patent for it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. This bill authorizes Mr. Wiard to renew an application in the Patent Office for an invention which he alleges he has made for the protection of the public against boiler explosions. The House will remember that we have appropriated $100,000 to enable a commission to make experiments in reference to the causes of explosions of boilers, to make such experiments as will guard against explosions. This man claims to have made an invention which will accomplish that purpose. Whether he has done so or not I do not know, and the committee do not pretend to say. His invention has never been applied in actual practice. It is an intricate, curious piece of machinery, somewhat expensive to apply, and difficult in its application. It is for that reason that it has not been applied.

While this man has been making his experiments for his own interest, and if successful for the preservation of human life, his lawyer failed to prosecute his application before the department to a conclusion in time to enable Mr. Wiard to obtain his patent. The limitation of two years made by the late law ran against him and he failed to obtain his patent. The bill of the committee simply permits him to go before the Commissioner of Patents and make his application as originally, with an unfinished experimental machine. I think it is right he should be permitted to do so. If the object he seeks to attain can by any possibility be attained by his invention, not only will the whole world pay him for it, but they would be grateful to him for it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Suppose the whole world can have the benefit of it without paying this royalty; they are under no obligation now to pay it.

Mr. CONGER. My friend has been in the employment of the Government for the last year or two; and he has been so accustomed to array himself upon the side of the Government against all claimants that he thinks it his duty to do so now.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I certainly do.

Mr. CONGER. His duty as a lawyer does not follow him here. It is his duty as a member of the House to make laws for the benefit of the whole people as well as for the United States Government. That is the duty which follows him here. But his duty as an attorney for the Government ceased when he took the oath as a member of this House. I know he has been the attorney of the Government in regard to claims concerning an entirely different matter. I do not know what they are, and I do not care. My duty as chairman of the Committee on Patents, and the duty of my committee, is to take up such matters as this House may send to us, and to report for the action of the House what commends itself to our judgment; and this is entirely independent of, and disconnected with, anything else between Mr. Wiard and this Government.

One point more: as members of this House, legislators for the rights of the people, secured to them by the Constitution, why do we need to be attorneys of the United States, and put in a saving clause for the Government in reference to an invention which if good at all is valuable as a life-saving contrivance not only to the whole people but to the Government and officers of the Government? I deny the correctness of such a principle. It has already given occasion to more litigation than anything else connected with patents. Such a proposition embodied in the law is an assertion that this Government will not grant to the citizen his constitutional rights, which are above all statutory law. That is all that can be made of it. Let the Government, if it grants a man the rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution in reference to a life-saving machine which is of great benefit to the employés of the Government as well as to other citizens, make its arrangements with the inventor and pay him as private citizens do.

The people of the United States, whatever may be their feelings about the exorbitant demands of patentees and monopolists with reference to inventions of a merely commercial or industrial nature, do not desire to lay their hands upon an invention which is designed for the saving of their lives and the lives of their families as they travel on the steam vessels and railroads of the country.

In conclusion let me say that in the behalf of the committee the necessity for this legislation may have arisen from laches on the part of Mr. Wiard's attorney, neglect of his agent, in consequence of the operation of a new law which had not been brought to the notice of the public by actual practice. The limitation of two years was made in 1871. Before that there was no limitation as to the time within which the application could be prosecuted. That law of 1871 was interposed about the time this application was made; and the notice of this inventor or other inventors was not specially called to that change in the law. Any man, unless he was a practicing lawyer and had occasion to look into the law, might reasonably have supposed that the old law was in force giving two, three, four, five, or six years in which to pursue the application.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Does the gentleman from Michigan mean to say that Mr. Wiard or his attorney was in ignorance of the existence of that law?

Mr. CONGER. The "gentleman from Michigan" means to say that never having seen Mr. Wiard, not knowing his qualities, characteristics, or peculiarities, never having either prosecuted or defended him, and knowing nothing about him personally, he takes his sworn statement and the proof before the committee, as in his humble opinion he should take it, as truth, to be acted on by him and the committee; and this proof shows the laches on the part of the attorney.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The gentleman carefully avoids answering my question, which he could answer very easily if he saw fit.

Mr. CONGER. Not "carefully avoids;" for the "gentleman from Michigan" very rarely avoids coming directly to the subject in hand.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I have asked the gentleman this question, on which the report of the committee is silent. He has made an argument tending to show that the laches of Mr. Wiard was caused by his ignorance of the existence of the law. The report does not state that; and I wish to ask the gentleman whether he means to make that statement.

Mr. CONGER. I answer by saying this: I will venture to say that the gentleman from New York himself, so learned and profound in his knowledge of the law, did not know till I told him that the law was altered in 1871.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Well; that is an answer to my question with a vengeance.

Mr. CONGER. And if the gentleman from New York, learned in all law of all lands, did not know it, how could this poor, practical inventor know all this?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that in the opinion of the committee Mr. Wiard did not know of the existence of the law? If so, why did they not say so in their report?

Mr. CONGER. I do not mean to say any such thing. I merely say that if my friend from New York did not know it, perhaps Mr. Wiard did not.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Ah! "perhaps;" that is what the gentleman means.

Mr. CONGER. But I mean to say that the proofs before the committee show that there was a neglect on the part of the attorney to press a claim that ought to have been pressed; and, further, I mean to say that a change having been made in the law, limiting the time within which the application could be prosecuted, Mr. Wiard or any other man not familiar with the laws might not have seen the importance of pressing it himself.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CLEMENTS] will give me a few minutes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Very well.

Mr. HALE, of New York. It is a curious circumstance that no man ever rises here to defend the rights of the Government against a claimant for a patent or for money without being branded by somebody upon the floor as an attorney in the interest of the Government or as "acting in "bad taste," as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] phrases it, or as being guilty of an impropriety in standing in his place here and attempting to vindicate legal principles with regard to the rights of the Government, which should apply alike to all cases. To the intimation of the delicate gentleman from Connecticut that I am guilty of "bad taste" in the position I take here, I reply that I am entirely willing to leave the question of "good taste" to this House, which will determine whether it is in better taste for me to attempt, as I ordinarily do, to defend the rights of the Government here, or for the gentleman from Connecticut, as he ordinarily does, to lend the influence of his voice and vote in favor of every monopoly and every claim which is proposed here.

I leave the gentleman to make that as he pleases.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Of course I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Connecticut when I have concluded what I have to say.

Now, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] thinks it entirely inconsistent for a gentleman in this House to put himself in the position of defending the rights of the Government here, and imputes it to me as a fault, a crime almost, that I should stand here, and defend the Government against hasty action upon a proposition which will be the basis of unjust claims, with the slur I have been so long the attorney of the Government I have forgotten the position I bear as a member of the House. The imputation was unworthy of the gentleman. I am his peer on this floor in every respect—as to my duties as a member, my integrity as a member, my relations to the Government, my relations to my constituents, and my relations to the House.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say to the gentleman that my language will not warrant any such construction.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to reply to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I yield the floor to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER.]

Mr. CONGER. He asks me whether I was acting as a member of the House or——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I trust both of these gentlemen will have the right to attack me at once, one on the right and one on the left.

Mr. CONGER. It does not need two.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I will yield to both of the gentlemen, one from Connecticut and one from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes; I will yield to him for half a minute.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman who seems to take so much dudgeon at the remark I made will give me his attention for the half minute I will repeat exactly what I did say. I said it was not in good taste——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's half a minute has expired.

Mr. KELLOGG. I said it was not in good taste to bring in another claim pending before this House in favor of this person to prejudice any other good claim in his favor pending here, and I repeat it to the gentleman; and when he recovers his temper I trust he will take it good-naturedly.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I hope the gentleman in his next book on "Taste" will insert that.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to anybody else than the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] and I yield to him for five minutes.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this bill is different from that of my colleague. It goes not only to this bill, but generally to all bills of this class. Here comes an inventor, of the merits of whose invention I know and say nothing, and asks for a congressional monopoly, a special privilege, which the law does not give him. In the first place an inventor has no natural right to any such monopoly at all. The natural right of a man who invents a thing is to use it himself and to keep it to himself, or dispose of it or make it public upon such terms as he can agree for. Our Constitution does indeed authorize Congress to secure to inventors the exclusive right to their invention on such terms as it sees fit. Why? Not for the mere interest of the inventor alone, but for the interest of the people, and to promote, as the Constitution says, the progress of science and useful arts.

The monopolies thus given to inventors have been often in my judgment extended too far. The law now provides that any man who comes in within two years after he has made a discovery may have a patent for its exclusive use for seventeen years. Here is a man who did not come in within two years and who is considered by the law to have abandoned his discovery; and yet he wants his right of monopoly just as if he had applied for it in time, and gives as excuses for his laches that his attorney was negligent and that he forgot it. Congress, sir, is indeed a court, a high court, competent to pass upon and judge of such excuses; but unfortunately it is a court where men are almost always heard ex parte. That is the end of its judgments. This inventor insists that his delay in applying for his patent was the result of the negligence of his attorney. But, sir, all over the world in every court, principals are often held liable for the neglect of attorneys. But, beyond that, this inventor says, "Not only was my attorney negligent, but I myself forgot to apply in time." He was so busy in the Halls of Congress, so busy in the Departments, so busy with his gun claims, as my colleague [Mr. HALE] has suggested, or with perfecting this invention as the committee say, that he overlooked this important invention for the preservation of the lives of the people and economy of consumption of steam for more than two whole years; and now he wants to go before the Commissioner and satisfy him. Satisfy him of what? Not that he forgot; not satisfy him that his attorney was guilty of laches? O, no; but to satisfy him of the value of his invention; for by this bill Mr. Wiard is to have a patent for this invention provided only the Commissioner thinks it is a valuable and original one. I submit this is a pure, naked case of the grant of a special privilege and monopoly without any sufficient reason, and ought not to be granted. It is alike without reason and without excuse. I think much might be said against most of these cases of extension and exception to the general law. I believe the patent laws are now sufficiently onerous and against the interests of the people, and ought not to be made more so in particular cases.

I think, therefore, that when a man comes to get a patent for seventeen years for an invention so valuable as this is declared to be in the interest of human life——

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. He only asks an extension for seven years.

Mr. POTTER. Well, an extension of seven years, if this bill is for extension. I understood it to be for an original patent. I say when a man comes to get a patent or an extension of a patent for an invention so valuable as this is declared to be in the interest of human life and consumption of fuel, I think he should have some better excuses than that his attorney forgot, or that he himself forgot, to make his application during the whole period of two years, when he was himself during that time in this Capitol engaged in other important matters, pressing claims against the Government, or at any rate not unfamiliar with the Patent Office and its regulations.

Mr. PARKER, or New Hampshire. I wish to ask the gentleman if he thinks this is more a monopoly than any other patent, and would he refuse all applications and stop granting all applications for patents on the ground that every patent is a monopoly?

Mr. POTTER. I answer the gentleman from Connecticut——

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. New Hampshire.

Mr. POTTER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; these gentlemen from Connecticut have got so mixed up with this discussion, and have so much always to say in behalf of patents, that I made the mistake. They are monopolies which a man has two whole years to obtain by operation of law. The law has wisely provided that if a man does not obtain his monopoly within that time he shall not do it at all. In that respect I think that the law is right, and should not be set aside without better excuse than this case affords.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I wish to say a word or two in reply to the two gentlemen from New York who have just addressed the House, and I shall then call the previous question.

First, I will say to the gentleman from New York in front of me, [Mr. HALE,] who assumes not only the right but the duty of the Government to pirate the brains of every man in the country, that I do not consider that to be the law, to be justice, or to be equity. I do not conceive that the General Government has any more right to the use of an invention of a poor half-witted inventor—for inventors are often of that character—than the humblest citizen has. It has been the custom heretofore, or for some years back—it originated I believe during the war times, on account of the immense power of the Government—for the Government to claim the power, not the right, to take that which belongs to a humble individual and to use it as it saw fit. That time has passed. The time has now come when the Government should be considered as having no more right than anybody else to use the invention of the very humblest citizen.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I should like to know from the gentleman from Illinois when the Government claimed that power?

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the gentleman does not know that, he is unfortunate in his reading of the history of the last few years. If the gentleman will go as far back as 1860, he will not find a single valuable invention used by the United States without compensation being made for it.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The gentleman is utterly and entirely in error.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The gentleman comes here now and does what? He offers an amendment to this bill declaring a general principle. He says that as a general principle the General Government should have the right to use all these patents. If this be true, why is it the gentleman has not introduced a bill for that purpose and had it referred to our committee? The gentleman has never introduced any bill here allowing the General Government to use every patent of invention. Why? Because he knows that a bill of that character would strike the sense of this House and the judgment of the whole country as so unjust that it would not receive half a dozen votes anywhere. Therefore he waits his opportunity to tack it on to this individual bill, where it will strike a poor devil who has no friends here. He applies to this invention a principle which he dare not attempt to apply to all the inventions of the country.

I wish to say another thing to the gentleman. He tells us that these things are wrong. Why does the gentleman not come before our committee and make an examination into these things for himself?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I did not come before the gentleman's committee because I did not dream that his committee had such a bill before them, or if they had that there was any possibility of their reporting it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Again I say that it is unfortunate that the gentleman is not better informed as to the proceedings of this House. If he made it his business to examine our records and to know what is done here, he would know these things are before the Committee on Patents; and if he felt it to be his duty to defend the rights of the Government, he would be looking out for these things and endeavor to do something in that direction.

But we are told by the other gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER]—the good-looking gentleman with the mutton-chop whiskers—that the committee has not heard both sides. The gentleman was never worse informed in his life. Had he been a member of the committee, he would have known that no committee ever heard so much on both sides of the question or was so bored with lawyers.

I will not occupy more of the time of the House. The Government has demanded of every patentee that he shall pay it a fee. It demands of this man that if it grants him a patent he shall pay the Government for that patent, and yet notwithstanding the fact that the Government puts its hand into the poor man's pocket and takes his money from him, the gentleman says that the Government should have the use of his patent for nothing.

Mr. COX. I desire to say a few words only. I have spoken to the House but once on these patent matters. In 1861 Congress passed a general patent law, which I think was the last bill signed by Mr. Buchanan before he went out of office.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Does the gentleman say that he has only spoken in this House once?

Mr. COX. No sir.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I was astonished at the statement.

Mr. COX. I said I had never spoken but once on a patent case. I have never lived in New England, where these patents are more or less obtained and inventions made. I want to call the attention of the honest, square men in this House—and this is a matter which concerns the grangers and I have a granger in my eye—to the fact that the law of 1861 to which I have referred extended all patents from fourteen to seventeen and a half years. I reported that bill on the last day of the session in March, 1861, and it was understood at that time by all parties in interest that with that general law there should be no more extensions granted at the Patent Office. If this House wants to act wisely and well, and will take the sensible advice of an experienced member, they will not undertake to make any laws in relation to patents except general laws. All special laws are more or less tainted, and I hope they will be voted down.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I have only to say that I am very glad that my young friend from New York who has just spoken [Mr. COX] and his colleague [Mr. POTTER] agree with the present Committee on Patents. We are opposed to special patent legislation, and we hold that there has been too great latitude in that direction in the past while these gentleman have been members of the House heretofore and we have not been. Like the gentleman from New York, I never was in New England myself, if that is anything to brag of; but I expect to go there before I die, and if not, perhaps, if I am good, I may go to Boston after I die. But I came from that portion of the country to which he refers where the grangers are, and I desire to say that the grangers have no disposition to do injustice by any man. They have the power and they are large enough and broad enough of heart and soul to desire that equal and exact justice should be done to every man from every portion of the country, and because I come from such a section I move the previous question on the bill.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I hope the House will vote down the previous question.

The question was put on seconding the previous question; and there were—ayes 87, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CLEMENTS, and Mr. HALE of New York, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 88, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered—ayes 21, noes 79.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 106, nays 99, not voting 85; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HUNTON said: I have been requested to state that Mr. LAMAR is detained from the House to-day by indisposition.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope we shall proceed with the call of committees for reports. I have a number of reports which ought to be made.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. FORT in the chair.)

FREDERICK F. BAURY.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was House bill No. 1941, to provide for the appointment of Frederick F. Baury on the retired list of the Navy.

The bill authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint upon the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, Frederick F. Baury, late volunteer lieutenant on the active list of the Navy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that it would save time to have the report read in each case without being specially called for. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick F. Baury, praying that he be commissioned a lieutenant in the Navy and placed on the retired list, in consequence of wounds received in the line of duty, have carefully considered the facts and circumstances of said petitioner's case, and find them as stated by him in his memorial.

They are these: The said Frederick F. Baury, at the age of seventeen, and in the month of August, in the year 1861, entered the Navy as a volunteer, and was appointed acting master's mate. He was on the frigate Congress when that ship was destroyed by the Merrimack, and opened the engagement on that occasion. He was most honorably mentioned by his commanding officer for good conduct and gallantry during the action, and promoted to acting master in consequence. He was then ordered to the South Atlantic squadron, and while attached to it cut out and captured by boats the steamer Alliance, during an attempt by the latter to run the blockade of Savannah. He delivered the steamer and cargo to the United States marshal at Boston. Master Baury was then promoted to the rank of acting volunteer lieutenant, and ordered to the frigate Colorado, Commodore Thatcher, where he served in both attacks upon Fort Fisher, and in the latter of which, finally resulting in its capture, he was shot down while gallantly leading a detachment of sailors against the face of the fort. The gunshot wound received by Acting Lieutenant Baury was of peculiar or rare character. An Enfield rifle-ball struck him upon the side, near the hip, and passed through the body, emerging at the opposite hip. In its course it passed through the intestines, and by concussion so shattered the nerves that paralysis of the lower part of the body ensued, and although largely overcome, at periods asserts itself now, and is likely to become permanent. The wounds from time to time open, and he has been repeatedly in hospital. Prior to this disaster Mr. Baury was an efficient officer and accomplished navigator, highly commended by his commanding officers. He was in charge of the deck of the Canandaigua during a severe cyclone in the month of December, 1866, for eighty consecutive hours, and by this terrible exposure increased the calamitous effects of his wound. Selected for admission to the regular rank of lieutenant in the Navy in the early part of 1867, and at a time when he was undergoing severe surgical treatment at the Brooklyn hospital, he resolutely journeyed to Hartford to undergo examination. He reached that city worn out in bodily strength, and in a nervous, anxious, and almost irresponsible mental condition, and was urged by his friends to abandon or defer the attempted examination. He resisted entreaties, and in this wretched and helpless state presented himself and was rejected. We believe but for his wounds, and their fearful consequences, he would have easily passed and secured the rank of lieutenant. He was honorably discharged February 8, 1869.

The passage of the accompanying act is recommended.

Mr. ARCHER. Before this bill is acted upon, I think it my duty to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the bill itself. If it were only to affect an individual who is to be placed upon the retired list, perhaps I should say nothing, having been in the minority of the committee that reported the bill. But I think it my duty, however unpleasant that duty may be, when a precedent is about being established which may lead to trouble in the future, to call the attention of the committee to that fact. That this officer was a meritorious officer I do not deny. That he has claims upon the Government I do not deny. But those claims are being met, as are the claims of many others of our wounded naval and military heroes, by a pension from the Government. In this case it is proposed to take one of the volunteer officers of the Navy, and place him upon the retired list as a lieutenant. If that is done, in addition to the pension he now receives, he would draw from the Government every year $1,800 as long as he lives.

But two cases of this kind have been provided for by legislation since the war, all the rest having been rejected. My impression is that those two cases passed more from inadvertence than from any particular claim or merit they had over other naval officers who had been wounded. This officer just now I think has no particular claim to ask of us additional pay. He is a civil employé of the Government, in the custom-house at New York or Baltimore, drawing in addition to his pension some twelve or fifteen hundred dollars a year as such employé. If this proposed additional pay is ever to be given him, I think it will be ample time for the House to pass an act in his favor when he shall have ceased to be a civil employé of the Government.

The majority of the committee of which I am a member report this bill. I believe sympathy was one of the principal causes which led them to make this report. My sympathies are that way also. But when we start this thing there is no telling where the end may be. Immediately after it was announced in the papers that this bill had passed the Naval Committee we had numerous other applications of like cases.

When the widow of a meritorious officer, with three or four children to support, is given only fifty dollars a month for the support of herself and children, I think it is hardly fair for us to single out an officer who, I believe, has but himself to support, and give him his pension and $1,800 a year besides, while the widow draws but $600. I have thought it my duty, however unpleasant it was, to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to this subject before the precedent shall be established. Whatever the members of the House may in their judgment think well to do, of course will be cheerfully acquiesced in by me.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Is this officer in service now?

Mr. ARCHER. He is not in the naval service; but he is in the civil service of the Government, being in one of the custom-houses of the United States, and drawing not less than $1,200, and I think $1,500, a year. He is besides on the pension-rolls.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. This officer was formerly in the custom-house at New York, but had to leave on account of his health.

Mr. ARCHER. He was in the custom-house when the application was made to the committee; whether he is now or not I do not know.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. He came to me with a letter of introduction as one who had been in the custom-house. I supposed he was not in the custom-house then.

Mr. ARCHER. He was detailed to duty in the custom-house at Baltimore; that is the way I came to know of it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I do not know that I wish to antagonize this bill, for two reasons; one is that the committee of which I am a member has by a majority agreed to report it; the other is that it is in favor of an officer whom I suppose to be quite a meritorious one. But the Committee of the Whole I think ought to know exactly what they are doing.

The retired list of the Navy is designed for the benefit of those officers who have given their whole lives to the service of their country; forty-five years of service being the length of time required. When they have become sixty-two years of age, have served the country forty-five years in that dangerous capacity, they are allowed to go upon the retired list, and receive, under the name of pay, but really as a pension, three-fourths of the amount received while in active service. A lieutenant of the Navy receives $2,400 a year as sea pay; of course three-fourths of that amount is $1,800.

It is proposed by this bill to take a gentleman now in civil life, who never has been in the regular Navy, and legislate him into the regular Navy, and then legislate him upon the retired list. He is now a young man. It is proposed that we shall legislate him now from civil life, where he has been for some eight or ten years, upon the retired list of the Navy, which is designed for men who have served their country in perilous positions for forty-five years, and have become sixty-two years of age. It is proposed that we shall legislate him upon this retired list, so that he shall receive all his life, without rendering any further service whatever to the country, $1,800 a year. And this will be in addition to the pension which he now draws, and of which I suppose he is a meritorious subject. I suppose from what I have heard that he richly deserves that pension, and perhaps more too. But he will get this $1,800 in addition to what he receives as a pension.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is not the gentleman in error? Would not the pension cease under the law if this man should receive pay on account of being upon the retired list?

Mr. SCOFIELD. There is no law, so far as I know, which would stop his pension; but if there is such a law, then this man's pay on the retired list would be in lieu of the pension, although the special act which we are now asked to pass makes no such provision.

Now, Mr. Chairman, about two or three years ago, we did pass a law placing upon the retired list of the Navy a man who had happened to be in the volunteer service for a short time; and the publicity which that act obtained through the papers has brought to us applications from a large number of persons asking legislation of similar character for their benefit. I believe that since this bill was reported by a bare majority, the committee has decided to refuse all other applicants. Looking over the ground a little further, they have come to see the effect of what they have done; and no other bill of this character will be presented from that committee at this session. But the passage of this bill will make a precedent on the part of the House.

Now, if there is anything that all the people crave it is equality. I find that the soldiers who come here and ask us to equalize their bounties complain of the inequality. They say that some who were in the service for years received no bounty, while others serving for less time obtained considerable bounty. It is the inequality of which they all complain. We on the Naval Committee hear this complaint all the time. Somebody comes forward and says that he rendered as much service as some other man, but he has not been made equal to him in pay or in position or in honor. We hear that complaint all the time. When the clerks and others come to us to have their pay raised, they say that their pay ought to be equal to that of somebody else. Inequality is the great wrong of which they complain.

Now it is proposed, Mr. Chairman, to take a single man who happened to serve in the volunteer navy and legislate him upon the retired list, where he will for all his life get $1,800 a year without rendering any service whatever. Now, why should one man who happened to be in the volunteer service be put upon that list, and not all the wounded volunteer naval officers? If one is placed upon that list all should be; and if the officers of the Navy are to be thus treated why not the officers of the Army? The service of the latter was more perilous. In my own district, upon the lake, where it was optional with volunteers to take service either in the Army or the Navy, they always chose the Navy as offering the safest and the easiest berth. Now if you take a poor, wounded naval officer and put him upon the retired list, giving him $1,800, with no service to render for the money, why not take the volunteer officers of the Army and put them upon the retired list of the Army?

What we want is that our brave soldiers and sailors who were so unfortunate as to be wounded in the service shall be treated all alike. If you put wounded soldiers and sailors upon the retired list on equal terms, then you will be treating them alike; not otherwise.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that speeches on this bill be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object.

Mr. GOOCH. I ask the attention of the committee for a few moments to the facts in this case as they appeared before the Naval Committee and are stated in the report.

This young man, seventeen years old at the breaking out of the rebellion, applied for service in the Navy, was appointed acting-master's mate, and assigned to duty on board the Congress. He was on the vessel when she went down, and for his gallantry on that occasion was promoted, mere boy in age as he was, to acting master. He was then ordered to the South Atlantic blockading squadron, and among other very meritorious acts of service led a party which cut out and captured the steamer Alliance, while lying in the Savannah River ready to run the blockade. This vessel he carried to Boston and delivered to the United States marshal. For this gallant service he was promoted to acting volunteer lieutenant.

He served in both engagements against Fort Fisher under Admiral Thatcher; and in the last was shot through the body and wounded in the fearful manner described in the report while leading a party of sailors to the attack. His subsequent suffering and service after his partial recovery and condition at the time of his appearance before the examining board for admission into the regular Navy are briefly stated in the report. The only reason that he was not then transferred to the regular Navy was the fact that he was at the time of his examination so enfeebled in mind as well as body that he failed to pass his examination in navigation.

That this was the cause of his failure fully appears by the letter of Admiral Thatcher on file in this case, in which he states that he was a competent navigator, and had so proved himself in the service, and that his failure must have resulted from his physical condition at the time of examination. Baury's friends knew that he was not in a condition to undergo the examination at that time and tried to dissuade him; but he felt that he should recover more rapidly if he could be relieved of all anxiety as to his future position, and so made the attempt, and failed for the reason I have stated.

The question which this committee is now called upon to decide is this: Shall this young man be relieved from the consequence of his failure to pass this examination and placed upon the retired list, or shall his failure for the reason I have stated—for there is no question as to the facts in the case—forever deprive him of the position he had so nobly earned and which the law intended he should have? It will be remembered that at the close of the late war both the Army and the Navy were substantially reorganized, and while full justice was done to the officers of the regular Army and Navy, the merits of the volunteer officers were also recognized.

In the reorganization the question was not so much whether the officer had been educated at the military or naval school, as it was what he had done during the war. He was to stand or fall by the record he had made for himself in actual service. The country demanded that the volunteer officer who had rendered brillant and meritorious service should, if he desired it, be incorporated into the regular Army and Navy on a just equality with Army and Navy officers. And the demand was not merely that the volunteer officer who had escaped serious disability should be transferred to the active list, but it was also that the disabled and crippled volunteer who had rendered meritorious service should be placed upon the retired list on an exact equality with the regular. Now let us suppose for a moment that a meritorious officer who had been educated at the naval school had lost his status in the Navy because he had failed to pass an examination required by law at a time when he was suffering from physical disability received in the line of his duty and of such a character as to temporarily affect the mind as well as the body, should we hesitate for a moment to relieve him of the consequence of the failure? Should we not be called upon by all the honorable men of the Navy to grant relief in such a case?

Shall we not grant the same measure of relief to this volunteer officer?

I do not ask you to legislate a man into the retired list because he has been a brave man and seriously wounded. But I ask you to relieve a brave and badly disabled volunteer officer of the consequence of a failure to pass an examination which he would have sustained without question had he not at that moment been disabled temporarily in mind as well as body by the fearful injury he had received. I ask you to place him where the law intended he should go. If he had not taken part in the last attack on Fort Fisher, or had not exposed himself to almost certain death by leading a detachment of sailors against its face he would have been made a lieutenant on the active list of the Navy with increase of rank and pay before him. Shall this act deprive him of his place on the retired list?

It is said that there is danger that we may overload the retired list and break it down. Not by putting upon it men who have earned their place there as this young man has. I do not believe there is a man on the list with stronger right to be there than this young man. He at the time when young men of his age were asking to enter the Naval Academy asked for active service, knowing his services were needed. How he bore himself in the service his record shows.

If this young man is refused a place on the retired list, I think it will appear to the public that this committee thinks a volunteer officer should have no place there, no matter how brilliant his service. He must be content with a pension, and leave the retired list for the regular officers only. I believe, sir, that it is a simple act of justice to this young man to pass this bill, and that the placing him upon the retired list will strengthen it, instead of tending to break it down.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The only question I desire to ask the gentleman is, what was the rank of this man when he was disabled?

Mr. GOOCH. He went into the Navy as acting master's mate. For his service on board the Congress he was promoted; and he was promoted from time to time for services until he was made volunteer lieutenant at the time when he was finally shot down at Fort Fisher. And he now asks to go into the same position into which the law contemplated he should go, and into which he would have gone if he had not exposed himself as he did by leading an attacking party against Fort Fisher. For no one who knows the man and who knows the history of the case will question for a moment that if that young man had not led the attacking party on Fort Fisher when shot through the body, he would to-day have been on the active list of the Navy and one of its brightest ornaments.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have not heard the report read; I wish to ask whether this officer is not now receiving a pension?

Mr. GOOCH. I do not know whether he is now receiving a pension or not. I believe he does draw a small pension.

Mr. ARCHER. He draws a pension.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I do not know that I desire to say very much on this subject, except to warn the committee that if you pass this bill you establish a precedent and probably open the doors for putting upon the retired list of the Army all the volunteer officers who are bearing upon their bodies the marks and scars of battle. Now, you have a retired list of the Army composed of about three hundred officers who were in the regular service. But there are thousands and thousands of war-scarred and weather-beaten men who served in the volunteer army, who are deprived of limbs and who are mere shadows walking upon the earth; and they are as much entitled to recognition of this kind as is this man.

I would be very sorry to question, or to doubt for a moment, that this man was a most brave, heroic, and daring officer in the service which he rendered at Fort Fisher. I have read the report, and it speaks highly of the sacrificing valor of this man. But you may search the records over of the War Department, and you will find there men who are just as meritorious, who were just as brave, as this man; and if you open the doors of the Navy so as to permit volunteer officers to be placed on the retired list, with what degree of justice will you close them to the volunteer officers of the Army?

Sir, this becomes a serious question to-day—not as to whether you will recognize the services of one man, but whether you will establish a principle by which you must recognize the men of another branch of the service who are similarly situated.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We will deal with that when it comes up.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. But I do not believe in doing this thing by piecemeal. If you are in favor of a principle, say so; and say that the men who were in the naval service of the country and who were in the Army, and who received wounds and are disabled to-day, shall be put on the retired list, and then do away with the pensions of such as are put on the retired list.

The idea of pensions was in some degree to compensate men for services in the Army and Navy when they become disabled. You are paying pensions to disabled men who served in the Navy and in the volunteer service of the Army. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to say that if you pass this bill this man will not only get $1,800 as pay on the retired list but that he will get a pension besides. He is able to do duty, and I understand is at present an inspector in the New York custom-house.

Mr. GOOCH. The gentleman, I am sure, does not wish to create a false impression.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. By no means.

Mr. GOOCH. I do not understand that if he goes on the retired list his pension continues.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. There is no law, as I understand, to prohibit its being paid; there is no law which will prevent his receiving a pension if placed on the retired list.

Mr. GOOCH. I say distinctly that you cannot find a case on record where a man has a pension who is on the retired list. The one supersedes the other.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I am not filled with precedents on this subject. I only desire to say that I have the authority of the chairman of the Committeee on Naval Affairs for what I state.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Then the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is wrong.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. He may be wrong; but the principle I am contending for is right.

Mr. GOOCH. If you want a provision in the bill that this man shall not receive a pension after he is placed on the retired list, put it in the bill.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I shall oppose the bill, not because I am wanting in sympathy for this man, but because I think that at this time we are not in a condition to afford this kind of expense or to establish a principle such as this will introduce into the administration of the affairs of the country.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of disposing of this bill in Committee of the Whole, and instead of moving to strike out the enacting clause, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the pending bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the bill be referred by the House to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with instructions to inquire whether the pension of Frederick F. Baury should be increased.

I wish to say but a word. It is clear that this is only a proposition to increase a pension. I do not think there is anything more discreditable than for us to do anything by indirection in this House that may be done directly. Our legislation is for the benefit of the entire country. We scarcely knew the effect of this bill until we were informed by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. SCOFIELD] and his colleague on the committee from Maryland, [Mr. ARCHER.] We are now informed that the effect of the bill is to increase the pension of this gentleman, who is in the civil service, to the rate of $1,800 a year. I submit that the proper mode of accomplishing that object is to refer this bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The resolution introduced by the gentleman from Indiana strikes me as the most proper method of disposing of the bill now before the committee, and I trust it may be adopted by the committee. I only wish to say that while fully appreciating the peculiar merits of the gentleman for whose benefit this bill is proposed, it cannot but be apparent to the House that the bill constitutes a most dangerous precedent in regard to the future of the retired lists of the Army and of the Navy. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that those retired lists in both arms of the service were never intended merely as a substitute for pensions. They were never intended as places to which men should be assigned as a reward for meritorious services or as compensation merely for injuries sustained. The origin and inception of these retired lists was in bills to promote respectively the efficiency of the Army and the Navy, and to transfer to those lists officers in those respective branches of the service who by age, disability, through wounds or injuries received in the service, or otherwise had become incompetent to perform active duty. It was desirable that such officers should not be in the way of promotion and the filling of their places by persons qualified. The turning them out upon pensions merely was felt to be hard, and these retired lists were created mainly with a view of promoting the efficiency of the Army and Navy, and not as places for pensioners merely as such. I sincerely hope that the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana will be adopted.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, this bill was committed to me to make a report in the case. I was unfortunately absent when the bill came up this morning, and hence I am ignorant of the statements or arguments made by my colleagues on the committee, but I may assume that they proceeded upon a principle similar to that maintained by my colleague from New York, [Mr. HALE,] that the passage of this bill will incumber the retired list of the Navy. Now, this case may be distinguished entirely from ordinary cases of retired officers. In 1866 appropriate legislation was had providing that officers of the Navy might for gallantry, ability, and distinguished services be selected by certain allotted officers of the Navy for examination from the volunteer service for entry into the regular service, and in pursuance of the provisions of that bill, and in furtherance of the honorable intent of Congress in its passage, this young man, then suffering severely from wounds of an extraordinary character, was selected as one of the candidates for examination. The time for this examination was limited. Mr. Baury's friends remonstrated with him, as the report shows, against attending this examination. He had prior to this been a competent and efficient officer, as a letter from Admiral Thatcher, which is among the papers and which I ask the Clerk to read, will show.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that that letter is not among the papers.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. Then I will state—and I can be corrected by my colleagues if I state aught erroneously—that that letter not only commended Mr. Baury, but assured the Committee on Naval Affairs that in the matter of navigation he was a competent and efficient officer. When he appeared before the board of examiners, against the remonstrances and expostulations of his friends, he failed in the single item of navigation. He was sick, weary, wounded, and almost in a condition that might be regarded as mentally aberrant, and he failed upon the one point. If he had not failed in that one point, because of his misfortune and the effects of wounds received in battle, he would have been admitted to the regular service, and if so admitted would on the continuation of his malady or incompetence or physicial disability have to-day been on the retired list.

This bill comes before the Committee of the Whole, not in the light of a bill for a pension, not in the light of a bill for relief from anything except the misfortune resulting from a wound, which misfortune alone prevented him from now occupying the position this bill seeks to give him. So far as his having a pension is concerned, I maintain that the Federal statute provides that he shall be deprived of that pension the moment this bill shall become a law.

I further assert that he is not an inspector in the custom-house at New York, or in any other custom-house. A clerical position was given him in the appraisers' department at the instance of generous friends, some of the duties of which he is at times able to perform, and at other times he must pay some one else to perform them. Of course that position will be vacated, and of course that salary will fall, the moment this bill shall become a law.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] has likened this case to other cases. There is no other such case, or there has been none brought to the knowledge of the medical profession. He is wounded in a manner which prevents any proper attention or comfort from any eleemosynary institution. There is no poor-house in the land, no hospital in the country, that can afford to maintain this young man at times, when his disability shows itself in full force. The character of that disability is not one which can be stated in this presence. Medical men understand it; my colleagues on the committee understand it.

I assert that my colleague on the committee, my friend from Maryland, [Mr. ARCHER,] will himself join with me in the expression of the conviction that, assuming the medical reports to be correct, this young man is verging upon a paralysis that will force him sooner or later to drag a half-dead body through the waste of a ruined life, a life ruined in the cause of his country.

Gentlemen talk about this establishing a precedent. Why, sir, the last Congress established the precedent. Two volunteer officers of the Navy, not then serving in the Navy, were by legislation here put upon the retired list. You have already established the precedent; two of them in the cases of Moffat and Chester.

Mr. ARCHER. The only two cases were, I think, those of Kean and Chester. There was another man whose name was put on a bill, but before the passage of the bill he died.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. He was put on, but before the passage of the act he died, the gentleman says. I trust that my colleagues did not kill him by their opposition. I trust the Committee of the Whole will make due discrimination between this case and an ordinary case of retiring an officer. The House the other day took an officer from the retired list and put him on the active list; therefore there is a vacancy which can be well filled in this way.

I trust the committee will take the proper legal view of this case. My colleague from New York [Mr. HALE] certainly would not claim that an accident at the moment of the performance of a duty, that disqualified him from the performance of that duty, would render a person disqualified to receive this relief. And if no sentiment of generosity is to come in, let me say that the record of this young man is as fine as any that can be presented. I trust the Committee of the Whole will act favorably on this bill.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I can explain the case to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCUDDER] has referred, the unfortunate precedent that was made two or three years ago. I was absent by order of the House, attending an investigation in the South for some time. While I was absent the case of Chester came before the House; I think that was the name. It was referred to a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, whose sympathies, like the sympathies of my friend from New York, [Mr. SCUDDER,] were excited in behalf of the man. I believe that he, as he informed me afterward, went around to members of the committee on the floor of the House and got their consent to report a bill, without considering very much the question of precedent, or fairly understanding the principle involved in it. With a kind heart and an earnest desire to relieve humanity, he got the House to pass the bill, without perhaps understanding very much about it.

The bill then went over to the Senate, and there the name of some one else was put in the bill, and so amended the bill was returned to this House. In the mean time I had returned, and had explained to my friend on the committee the principle involved in the bill, as I understood it. After awhile, and before the House acted upon the amendment of the Senate, the man whose name was put on by the Senate died and the Senate receded from their amendment. The bill then became a law, thus establishing an unfortunate precedent. Like the man who is represented by my friend from New York, [Mr. SCUDDER,] that man had a place in the city of Philadelphia. His case was urged upon the floor here by some Representative who was his friend, just as this man's case is advocated by my fair and honest friend from New York. That unfortunate precedent has been urged upon us this winter. I concede the merits of this man; I concede all that the gentleman has said in his favor, and which has been urged so eloquently to enhance the effect of a bad precedent which we set last winter. That is the only precedent. The gentleman knows, as a member of the committee, that at least some half-dozen other cases have come before our committee and they have all been referred to my friend from New York, [Mr. SCUDDER,] who has not yet found time to report upon them. I suppose he is waiting to see how this pioneer case succeeds.

Now, although I know the precedent will be a bad one, that the principle involved in this bill will work injustice to all the other volunteer Navy and Army officers who are not upon the retired list, yet having served upon the same committee with my friend from New York, I have come to value his judgment and fairness so much, that I am unwilling to differ with him even upon a case where I know his judgment must necessarily be warped by his sympathy and favoritism for a constituent and a feeling for the great hardship that constituent is suffering.

Mr. GOOCH. I wish to add but a single statement. I desire the House to understand in a word why this young man is not to-day on the retired list. He had performed all the conditions of the law required to put him there with the single exception of passing an examination. If he had passed that examination he would have been on the retired list under the law, which provided the men who had rendered such distinguished service during the war should upon passing the necessary examination be placed on the retired list. He submitted himself for examination, but in consequence, as has been demonstrated, of the wound from which he was suffering he did not pass.

Mr. POTTER. As I wish to get at the merits of this case, will the gentleman allow me to put to him a question or two?

Mr. GOOCH. Certainly.

Mr. POTTER. As I understand, this is the case of a person in the naval service who was wounded while gallantly performing his duty; he was entitled to be examined for admission to the regular Navy; he offered himself for examination; but in consequence of being at the time in an unfit physical condition was rejected. It is now certified, as I understand by those who are competent to determine the point, that he was entirely able to pass the examination had he been in health?

Mr. GOOCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. He asks therefore to be put in the same position in which he would have been had he been able physically to pass the examination, which in consequence of the wounds he had received he was prevented from passing?

Mr. GOOCH. That is the case precisely.

Mr. ARCHER. What certificate have we to prove that?

Mr. GOOCH. We have the certificate of Admiral Thatcher, who says that this man was the navigating officer on board his ship, and was a very competent and successful one before he was shot down.

Mr. POTTER. Will the gentleman allow one further question?

Mr. GOOCH. Certainly.

Mr. POTTER. As to the precedent which would be established by favorable action upon this case, what would the precedent be beyond that of admitting to the regular Navy persons who fail to pass an examination under similar circumstances?

Mr. GOOCH. The only precedent that would be established is this: that where a man had complied with every condition required by the law for admission to the retired list and had only failed when the final test was applied in consequence of having been shot through the body while in the service of the Government, he should notwithstanding this failure be admitted to that list. This is the precedent which would be established.

Mr. POTTER. As I understand, the only object of the examination is to ascertain competency.

Mr. GOOCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. And that fully appears in the case by the evidence on record?

Mr. GOOCH. Yes, sir; that is satisfactorily shown by the evidence.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Is there any evidence that this man is now competent?

Mr. GOOCH. There is no doubt that he is now competent. But no duty will be required of him while on the retired list.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the resolution offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the pending bill be reported to the House, with the recommendation that the bill be referred by the House to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, with instructions to inquire whether the pension of Frederick F. Baury should be increased.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 71, noes 29; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GOOCH and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 41.

So the resolution was adopted.

STEAMER CLARA DOLSEN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2101) for the relief of the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $66,150, in full of all claims for the use of said vessel by the Navy Department, and for all claims for damages to said vessel and furniture while in the service of the Government.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of the Navy of the 7th of January, 1873, together with the petition of the claimants, asking an appropriation for the payment of the amount reported to be due to the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen, have had the same under consideration, and adopt the following report made at the last Congress:

The letter of the Secretary is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 7, 1873.

SIR: The sum of $91,200 is stated by the solicitor, on examination, as the balance due the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen for the use of that vessel by the Government.

This claim, as reported by the solicitor, seems to be just and the amount due, but there is no appropriation at the command of the Department from which it can properly be paid at this time.

I, therefore, at the request of the parties in interest, refer the claim to you, with the request that a proper appropriation be made to enable the Department to pay it. The grounds upon which it rests are stated in the reports of Admiral Porter and of the solicitor, herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JAMES A. GARFIELD,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The Clara Dolsen, a steamer belonging to loyal citizens residing in the North, was, without the knowledge or consent of the owners and during their absence, in September, 1861, seized by the confederate forces at Memphis, on the Mississippi River, and was for a time held and used by said confederate forces. Afterward the agents of the owners thereof managed to get possession of the steamer, and while in their possession she was seized by the United States naval forces on the 5th day of July, 1862, and libeled in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, on the ground that "said steamer had been used by the knowledge and consent of the owner in aiding the present rebellion, contrary to the act of August 6, 1861."

Edward Walsh, William T. Dunning, and Samuel S. Edwards claimed the vessel as owners, and prayed that the vessel be delivered to them upon their giving such bond as the court might order, and filed their answer on September 2, 1862, denying that the vessel had been used with their knowledge or consent to aid the rebellion. The court ordered the vessel to be delivered to said owners upon their entering into bond for the appraised value of the vessel, conditioned to abide by and pay the money awarded by the final decree of the court.

The marshal returned to this order, that the appraisers having appraised the vessel at $45,000, the claimants, on the 19th day of December, 1862, tendered an approved bond as required by the court, but that he could not deliver the vessel, because the officers of the United States Navy were using the said steamer as a receiving-ship, and declined to surrender her. The court finally dismissed this libel, because the vessel was not in possession of the court, and ordered the marshal to restore the vessel to her owners.

After the dismissal of this libel an agreed case was submitted to the court upon a libel for the violation by said vessel of the non-intercourse act, which is as follows:

EXHIBIT F.

In the United States district court, southern district of Illinois.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA vs. STEAMER CLARA DOLSEN.

Agreed statement of facts.

It is agreed by and between the claimants and the district attorney, on behalf of the libelant, that the Clara Dolsen was impressed into the service of the rebel military authorities at Memphis in the month of September, 1861; that while she was in such service she made several trips to Fort Pillow and one trip to Columbus, Kentucky. That when she made those trips she was in the charge of the confederate military authorities, and used to transport munitions of war and supplies for the rebel troops at those points, and made one voluntary trip, transporting goods, wares, and merchandise from New Orleans to Columbus, Kentucky, and back to New Orleans, in January, 1862. That Columbus, although situated in the State of Kentucky, was at the time the Clara Dolsen made those trips, and for a long time before and after that, in the actual military occupation of the rebel forces, and that all that portion of country in the immediate vicinity of Columbus, and all that portion of Kentucky bordering on the Mississippi River below Columbus and down to the line of the State of Tennessee, was under the civil and military control of the rebel forces, and continued so to be for a long time thereafter, as it had been for a long time before, the Clara Dolsen made the trips above referred to. The claimants, Edward Walsh and William T. Dunning, reside in the city of Saint Louis, and Samuel S. Edwards resides in the State of New Jersey, and, as the district attorney is informed, are loyal citizens of the United States.

J. H. RANKIN,
For Respondents and Claimants.
L. WELDON,
For United States.

On this the court decreed the confiscation of the vessel. The owners filed an application for the remission of the forfeiture, and the judge indorsed it, as follows:

The United States vs. The Steamer Clara Dolsen, her engines, tackle, furniture, &c.

The Clara Dolsen was condemned because of a voluntary trip made between New Orleans and Columbus, as stated in the agreed case, (Exhibit F.) In my opinion the Secretary of the Treasury may safely remit the forfeiture thus incurred, on the ground that the trip was made without the consent or connivance of the owners, the case showing that they were residents of a loyal portion of the United States, and it failing to show that they were guilty of any disloyal acts or practices.

S. H. TREAT, District Judge.

The forfeiture was remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, by virtue of the authority conferred on him by law.

The Secretary of the Navy gave the following order:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, March 4, 1864.

SIR: The proceedings in prize in the case of the Clara Dolsen being terminated by a dismissal of the libel on the motion of the district attorney, and a consequent final decree of restitution from which there is now no appeal, and in the proceedings for forfeiture under the statutes, the court having ordered the marshal to deliver the vessel to her owners on their bond, you will deliver the Clara Dolsen, after taking out of her all Government property, to the marshal to be disposed of according to the order of the court.

If, after the delivery of the vessel to the owners, you consider it important to retain her in the naval service, you are authorized to do so, and to make the necessary arrangements with them as to compensation in full of all claims on account of the boat, informing the Department of your action in the case.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

GIDEON WELLES,
Secretary of the Navy.

Rear-Admiral D. D. PORTER,
Commanding Mississippi Squadron, Cairo, Illinois.

In obedience to this order the steamer was delivered to the owners, but as the naval officers in command at Cairo could not dispense with the use of the vessel at the time, she was retained by agreement for two months longer at a compensation to be paid therefor of $150 per day. For this last term of two months payment has been made by the Department amounting to $9,450.

The vessel was actually in the service of the Government from the 5th day of July, 1862, until the 5th day of May, 1864, as appears by the official certificate of Lieutenant John Scott, commanding receiving-ship at Cairo, Illinois, dated May 6, 1864. The owners presented their claim for this period, amounting to the sum of $100,650, and also for the sum of $45,000 damages to the vessel while in the service—the cabin having been torn to pieces to make a small-pox hospital of the vessel, and all the furniture lost or destroyed. But the claimants abandoned the claim for damages, it being conceded that the Navy Department could not adjust a claim for damages, but only for the loss of the vessel. Accompanying the claim were full proofs of the value of the use of the vessel, the damages done upon her, and of the absolute loyalty of the owners.

Your committee are of the opinion that the Secretary of the Treasury was fully justified in remitting the forfeiture. We will not here discuss the validity of the decree, but it is manifest that the judge was satisfied that the forfeiture should be remitted; and, in the opinion of your committee, it is at least questionable whether the decree was authorized by the law and facts of the case.

But as the judgment of your committee is not based on the validity or invalidity of said decree, we will not enter upon a discussion of its merits. It is clearly proven that the use of the vessel was worth at that time at least $150 per day, and the Navy Department has allowed at that rate for the full time that she was in the possession and in the service of the Navy Department, that is, $100,650 deducting the $9,450 heretofore paid. Your committee, however, do not feel satisfied of the justice or equity of the claim against the Government for the use of the vessel from the date of her seizure on the 5th day of May, 1862, to the 18th day of December, 1862, when, the claimants having given satisfactory bond as required by the court, the vessel was by the court returned to them. From that time the claimants were unquestionably entitled to the possession and use of their vessel, and that entirely independent of the course or result of subsequent litigation in regard to her.

From the said 18th day of December, 1862, to the 4th of March, 1864, when the Secretary of the Navy issued his peremptory order for the return of the vessel to the owners, and she was actually returned, is four hundred and forty-one days, and at $150 per day would amount to $66,150, which your committee find should be paid, and report herewith a bill to that effect, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I move to amend this bill by striking out $66,150 and inserting $22,050, making the compensation fifty dollars instead $150 a day.

Mr. HANCOCK. I ask that the opinion of the Solicitor of the Navy, which I send to the Clerk's desk, may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR AND NAVAL JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL, Washington City, June 24, 1871.

SIR: I respectfully submit the following report upon the claim of the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen.

The following facts appear from the papers submitted to me:

In the summer of 1862 this steamer was seized, and was afterward condemned, under a mistake of facts.

The Secretary of the Treasury, not as matter of "clemency," but of right and justice, ordered her discharge from both seizure and condemnation; and she was accordingly ordered by the United States district court for the southern district of Illinois to be given up to her owners. That order was disregarded by the naval authorities which had her in use as hospital and receiving ship.

The President of the United States ordered her to be given up to her owners, whose loyalty of character and conduct the papers submitted fully proved. But she was detained in the service some two months after Secretary Welles's order of release, on an agreement with (then) Rear-Admiral Porter to pay $150 a day for that detention. This rate may be regarded as moderate and reasonable. It is in evidence that the Clara Dolsen was in naval use from July 5, 1862, to May 5, 1864, inclusive, in all six hundred and seventy-one days. At $150 per day the amount due would be $100,650.

There is no legal reason why this should not be paid. In my judgment it should be paid whenever the Department has funds that can be thus applied.

Mr. Evans, of counsel in the case, agrees that no claim shall be made for furniture or any other matter.

I advise that payment (when in funds) be made upon the owner's receipt and release under seal duly executed of all claims and demands against the Government.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. BOLLES,
Solicitor of the Navy.

Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON, Secretary of the Navy.

JULY 22, 1871.

Upon careful re-examination of this case I find no reason to change the foregoing report.

J. A. B.

Mr. HANCOCK. I have but a few remarks to add to the report which has been read, which is the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations, and is identical in substance and almost in language with the report of the same committee made upon the subject during the last Congress. The report is based upon the facts stated with reference to the length of time the vessel was in the employ of the Government of the United States after the parties had given bond. The Secretary of the Navy recommended that an appropriation be made to pay the owners of the vessel for the whole time she was in the service of the Government, but the majority of the committee, and finally the whole committee, agreed that probably the ends of justice would be reached by allowing the parties compensation for the length of time during which the vessel was in the employ of the Government after the claimants had the legal right to her possession, having given bond. We thus track out the period, from the 5th of July, I believe, to the 18th of December, when the owners gave bond, but were not permitted to take possession of the vessel, because the public service required her use by the Government.

The amount allowed is $150 a day. By the testimony of the Secretary of the Navy, of Admiral Porter, and of others, it appears that a peremptory order to deliver the vessel was given on the 4th of March I believe; but the Government being then unable to dispense with her services, it was agreed to pay her $150 a day from that time until she should be delivered; and the authorities actually paid her for that length of time. Direction was also given to Admiral Porter to pay for the time preceding March 4, 1864, which order, he states, did not come to his attention, or if it did, passed out of his mind and was never attended to. If that direction had been brought to his attention, he would at that time have paid the amount estimated for by the Secretary of the Navy, being $91,200.

Some objection arises probably upon the hypothesis that the amount of compensation seems disproportionate to the value of the vessel. I am unable to give any reliable opinion on a case of this character. I know the estimate officers place on property where they take a bond for its forthcoming is by no means to be relied on. I think I may venture to assert neither the appraiser nor the marshal ever saw the vessel, but by some agreement which has grown up in our courts, it was agreed that a $45,000 bond would be sufficient to entitle the parties to repossess themselves of the vessel. All parties have by this time become satisfied of the unquestioned loyalty of these claimants.

I can state this much from the testimony before the committee. It appears from persons of such character and position in life as captains on steam-vessels, as agents, as underwriters, men of large experience in steamboating, these are the facts in the case. The Clara Dolsen was a first-class passenger steamer, built at Cincinnati in the winter of 1860 and 1861; she had only been in use, if I recollect aright, from January, 1861, had made only a few trips. She was thoroughly equipped and provided with everything pertaining to a first-class steamer running on that great river. She was shown to have been in perfect order at the time she fell into the hands of the United States officers. It appears further that after she had been returned to the possession of her owners the same witnesses having made a view of the vessel, having made a critical examination, estimated that it would require from thirty-five to forty-five thousand dollars to refit the vessel. The bulkhead had been knocked out so as to make the upper portion of the vessel one grand saloon. She was used as a receiving vessel. All these damages, however, are waived by these claimants, and they ask simply they may be compensated for the use of the vessel.

These same witnesses further stated that a vessel of this character during the whole time the Clara Dolsen was in possession of the Government of United States was making and receiving from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars a day, and she was reasonably worth at least $150 a day.

I confess I felt, as one of the committee, we were not doing full justice to these parties when these statements were made by persons who swore that they were disinterested, and were proved to have that position in connection with this character of business, when we cut off five months of the time the vessel was used without compensation at all.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the facts upon which the report is based; and the estimate made by the marshal of $45,000 as the value of the vessel did not have any influence upon the minds of these witnesses, nor did it have upon the mind of anybody else. We all knew enough about vessels to know that this Clara Dolsen steamboat must have cost more than $45,000, but as to how much it costs to build a first-class steamer to run upon the Mississippi River (and this one was said to be comparatively new when she went into the hands of the Government) I have no idea. These are the only arguments I have to offer, and I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] for having yielded to me.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced an amendment reducing the amount named in this bill to one-third of the amount reported by the committee, and I beg to say that is not a mere random-shot, but is based upon sound arguments which will be submitted to the committee.

Preliminarily, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is perfectly plain this is a case where there is no legal claim against the Government of the United States. If the Court of Claims were open to the prosecution of such a claim, it is plain upon legal principles these claimants could not recover. The vessel was libeled and condemned in 1861 for violation of the non-intercourse acts, on an agreed statement of facts on which the court found the vessel was forfeited to the United States by voluntary service in the cause of the rebellion. That decree of the court for the southern district of Illinois was never appealed from and never reversed, but on representation to the Secretary of the Treasury, not impeaching the soundness of the judgment but showing it to be a hard case in which relief was equitable, the Secretary being authorized by law, remitted the forfeiture and ordered the surrender of the vessel to her owners. The surrender by the Secretary of the Treasury, it will be borne in mind, was not based on any unsoundness or incorrectness in the judgment of the district court, but merely on the matter of hardship to the owners, who were alleged to be personally without fault.

The district court having found the vessel had voluntarily entered the rebellion, which imported voluntary assent by the party authorized to give it on behalf of the owner, I say there is no legal claim. The surrender was an act of grace, and the claim as it stands here is based on equity alone in favor of these same owners who were deprived of the use of the vessel without their fault. I am not disposed to say that proposition may be without foundation. I am not disposed to say Congress cannot in its discretion, in the absence of a legal claim, make equitable award to those parties.

Now I come to the question of the amount of the award, and here I beg to say any person who has had any knowledge of the ordinary range of war claims as they are made against the General Government cannot be ignorant the rule is immense exaggeration, and the exception is a claim anywhere in the neighborhood of what is justly due.

This vessel was appraised by the regular officers of the United States, of the district court, at $45,000 as her full value. She was in the employ of the Government four hundred and forty-one days, and the owner put in the modest claim against the Government for that use of $100,650 for ordinary use and wages, and the additional sum of $45,000 damages; making $145,650 for the use for a little over a year of a vessel worth $45,000 and injuries committed to her.

Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] says that this appraisal of $45,000 was undoubtedly low; but he gives us no evidence that may have been before his committee to show it to be incorrect. Prima facie I think we are certainly entitled to take it as the fair value of the vessel. She was appraised at that, and a bond was given on that appraisal for her surrender by the district court. It was accepted by both parties. But even suppose that we consider that amount small, and that we double it; make it $90,000. Then I submit that $66,150 for the use for less than fifteen months of such a vessel is an extravagant and enormous price. The computation which I have made is at fifty dollars per day, or $22,050 for the time she was used, which would be at the rate of $18,250 per year. I submit that $18,250 per year is a liberal allowance for the vessel if she were worth $90,000 instead of $45,000. It certainly would be a very large valuation for a vessel worth $45,000, as this appears to be.

But we are told that this rate was fixed by the agreement of the United States because after she was ordered to be surrendered by the Secretary of the Navy she was detained for two months, and then by agreement between the owners and the Government officers during that time $150 per day was paid. There, Mr. Chairman, we come to what is the fallacy of this case, and the fallacy which has run through many claims against the Government; and that is, that where the Government, under peculiar stress of circumstances, under great necessity, employs a vessel for a short time for a limited service, perhaps a special service, a service that may be injurious or dangerous to the vessel, and fixes a certain rate of compensation for that short time, the argument is made that for all other time in which she may have been in the service of the Government the same rate is to be allowed. Now, $150 a day would be $54,000 per year—$9,000 more than her entire appraised value. I submit that there is no reason for saying that because the Government paid $150 per day for this vessel under circumstances of which we are not fully advised, for two months in 1864, that is to be taken as the fair valuation of the vessel for fifteen months preceding that.

I have therefore offered my amendment to reduce this amount to fifty dollars a day, substituting the sum of $22,050 instead of the sum reported by the committee. And I believe most sincerely that that will be a liberal and ample allowance for that vessel, if the United States should pay anything for it.

Mr. HURLBUT. I propose to move that the bill and the amendment be referred to the Commmittee on War Claims. I cannot for a moment see how this claim ever came before the Committee on Appropriations. It so happens that I know something about this steamer, the Clara Dolsen, about her charter, and her use by the United States, and it is right that the House should understand, as succinctly as I can put the proposition, what the liability of the vessel and the owners was, how much has been released, whether the owners have any legal rights here, and if they have any equitable right how it is to be enforced.

The Clara Dolsen was seized after having been engaged for something more than a year in the confederate service. It was in proof, and is admitted in the agreed case, that the persons in charge of the boat, the captain and officers, who were the agents of the owners, consented to render voluntary service to the confederacy by a trip in 1861 from New Orleans to Columbus, then in possession of the confederates, and from Columbus back. Now, if the owners are liable, as they are at law, for the action of the captain and others whom they put in charge of the vessel, the judgment of confiscation rendered upon an agreed case by the district court of the southern district of the State of Illinois, and which appears upon page 2 of this report, was properly, justly, and equitably rendered. The vessel was confiscated for the wrongful act of the agents of her owners.

Mr. BARBER. They are bound by it.

Mr. HURLBUT. Of course they are bound by it. But the owners, who are gentlemen of the highest respectability, living in Saint Louis, and who claim that they never personally authorized these things, appealed to the discretion which is given to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury upon the presentation of the case to him remitted that judgment of forfeiture and confiscation.

Now, during all the time that she was under that sentence she was rightly in the custody of the United States; and the owners have no right to complain. And for all the time after the remission of the forfeiture was made known she had been paid for by voluntary arrangement.

I have seen the steamer a good many times. She lay for some time at Cairo, in the employ of the Navy Department as a receiving-vessel, and part of the time as a hospital ship. I suppose she was worth somewhere in the neighborhood of forty-five or sixty thousand dollars. I have not inspected her and cannot tell.

But I know, and so do you, Mr. Chairman, that in all cases where claims come up for services rendered to the United States by vessels the claims are based and the evidence is given invariably, not upon the theory of what would be the fair earnings of the vessel upon her cost, but upon the probable amount that could be made by the most successful business in which she could be put. That is the basis on which it always stands. The allowance of $150 per day for the use of this vessel, lying as she did there at Cairo lawfully in the custody of the United States, is an outrageous allowance, either upon the cost of the vessel or the service that was rendered. I am satisfied from the report of the committee that there is no legal liability on the part of the United States to pay one dollar, and that the only ground on which these claimants can ask anything of the United States is that they, the innocent, loyal owners at Saint Louis, had been brought by the wrongful acts of their agents, their own trusted and selected agents, within reach of the power of confiscation by the board of admiralty, which passed on the entire question. I am satisfied that the case ought to be better considered, and I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the whole matter, with all the papers, be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I am sufficiently acquainted with the facts in this case to determine exactly what ought to be done. But I do know one thing, that this claim properly belongs to the Committee on War Claims, and I do not know of any principle by which it can properly be considered by the Committee on Appropriations. Now I do protest for one against this practice, which has sometimes been adopted, of sliding around the proper committee and sending a claim of this character to a committee that has no proper jurisdiction over it. We have had some experiences in past Congresses in matters of this sort. Two or three years ago a bill was before the Committee on Claims and was rejected by that committee. It was afterward referred to another committee, and somehow or other got through Congress; and one of the parties, then a member of Congress, who had some agency in getting the claim through—as we know as a matter of public history; and if it were not for that I would not refer to it—was afterward indicted in the courts of this District and found guilty of practicing a fraud upon the Government in connection with another claim. There is now before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman an allegation made against the same gentleman of fraud before Congress in connection with the claim to which I have referred. I do not say it is true or just, but we should avoid any ground even of complaint. Now I know there is nothing of that kind here. But I protest that this practice of sending claims to committees to which they do not properly belong is one "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

Now, the first thing which strikes me as peculiar about this claim is that the committee proposes to allow a sum for the services of this boat for some four hundred days more than the entire value of the boat. This vessel was appraised at $45,000, and it is now proposed to allow for its use for a little over four hundred days some $65,000. We have already paid $9,000. Now, if the Government had seized this boat, and absolutely appropriated it to the use of the Government and made it the property of the Government, what would have been the rule of damages? Why, the value of the boat; that would have been the measure of damages.

Mr. POTTER. Who got the boat?

Mr. LAWRENCE. My friend puts the inquiry, "Who got the boat?" These claimants who now ask of the Government more compensation for fifteen months' service of this boat than the entire boat was worth. I say that if the Government had taken this boat, and made it the property of the Government, the rule of damages would have been $45,000. The claimants now ask $66,000, and this report proposes to allow it, after the claimants have had the boat surrendered to them.

But, Mr. Chairman, this boat was confiscated by a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction. It was therefore after the decree rightfully in the possession of the Government. This claim is urged upon the ground that that judgment of the court was remitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in pursuance of an act of Congress. Undoubtedly the Secretary of the Treasury had the power to remit that judgment. But the military authorities also had a power; the moment the sentence of condemnation was remitted, the military that moment had the power to seize this boat, and if they did so, and if this boat was engaged or had been engaged in giving aid to the rebellion, the Government had a right through its military officers to seize it, and the Government would not be liable to make any compensation for the act of its military officers. The Secretary of the Treasury was not the only judge who had a right to exercise a discretionary power in this matter. The military officers were also clothed with power to seize this boat, and they chose to exercise that power, and because they did so the Government is now asked to make compensation for its use during the time the military authorities in the exercise of their power deemed it proper to retain possession. As a question of law, of international law, as a question to be determined by the laws of war, if this boat, which the judgment of the court determined had been engaged in giving aid to the so-called confederate government, had been contributing its services through the agents appointed by the owners in aid of the rebellion, the owners could claim nothing from the Government, and the Government was under no obligation to make compensation. But if there should be any compensation made, in my judgment it ought to be made by referring this claim to some proper officer of the Government who could take testimony and ascertain what compensation ought to be made. As has been very well said, we know as a general rule that in cases of this description the demands made upon the Government for compensation are largely in excess of the amounts which ought to be allowed.

Sir, it is impracticable. I think it is unwise for Congress to settle the amount that ought to be allowed upon mere ex parte testimony submitted by the claimant to a committee, without power to send for persons or papers or to swear a single witness to ascertain any material fact in relation to the claim. For all these reasons, it seems to me that this claim ought to go to the Committee on War Claims. Then if anything ought to be paid to these claimants it can be determined after a proper examination of the case.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is due to the Committee of the Whole and to all concerned that a few words should be said in reply to some things that have fallen in the debate upon this bill. In the first place the question is asked how this claim came before the Committee on Appropriations. It came before that committee in the same manner in which at least seven or eight hundred things come before us every year, in a plain executive letter from the Secretary of the Navy, asking for an appropriation to enable the Department to pay what is due for services which have been rendered, just as we appropriate in a thousand instances. The letter is quoted in the first page of the report in this case; it is addressed to the chairman of the committee.

SIR: The sum of $91,200 is stated by the solicitor on examination as the balance due the owners of the steamboat Clara Dolsen for the use of that vessel by the Government.

Then the letter proceeds to state that the report or statement of the account is made up on examination of the report of Admiral Porter, and asks for an appropriation of money to pay that amount.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The Secretary of the Navy says he sends this to your committee at the request of the parties, not on his own motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, he does. As is always done in the Committee on Appropriations, the docket is frequently gone over and all the letters referred to sub-committees. I recollect now that when this was reached the question arose whether it was proper to put it in any bill then before us. And a letter was sent to the Secretary of the Navy making inquiries in regard to it. I do not remember what those inquiries were; I have not that letter by me. But in the record accompanying this case I find a letter from the Secretary of the Navy addressed to me, under date of June 24, 1873, last year:

SIR: To meet the formal objection which you raised, I suggest that a sufficient amount for the purpose therein named may be added to the naval appropriation bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEO. M. ROBESON.

That letter and all the papers before the committee were referred to a sub-committee, Judge MARSHALL, who made a very careful examination of the case, but did not conclude it in time to put this on the regular appropriation bill. When he came to make his report to the whole committee, we said that in our judgement the amount was excessive; that the ground on which it was based did not warrant the whole amount proposed; that it was in its nature, we thought, rather a claim than an adjudicated account which we were willing to stand by. We therefore declined to add it to any regular appropriation bill. It was so late in the session that it would be doing a gross injustice to let it sleep until another session of Congress. The committee therefore ordered an elaborate statement of their opinion to be made by Judge MARSHALL; the report was made, and it was presented to the House at the last session of Congress, but no action was had. That was the way the Committee on Appropriations obtained jurisdiction in this case.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That was before the Committee on War Claims was authorized.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly it was. At the opening of this session this case was regularly referred to the Committee on Appropriations, not by any member of that committee, but I suppose by the reintroduction of the memorial.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope my friend does not suppose I am censuring anybody.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose not. The same question came up again this session; did this belong upon an appropriation bill? I do not know that it would be considered an unparliamentary proceeding to put whatever amount ought to be paid upon a regular appropriation bill to pay one of the regular dues of a Department of the Government. Suppose the Navy Department should find it necessary to hire a merchant vessel to transport supplies, and should employ it for that purpose, and should pay for it as they have a perfect right to do out of the ordinary fund for such expenses. Suppose that before the full amount was paid the appropriation should run out and the Department should ask for a sufficient deficiency to pay the remainder of the bill. Ought that to be considered a claim? Not at all. That would come in as a regular deficiency appropriation. If this appropriation had been asked for immediately upon the employment of the vessel, I should say it would naturally come in the same category, except that there did arise a question about the length of time that should be reckoned in this case.

Mr. POTTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. POTTER. Suppose that at the time this letter was written to the Committee on Appropriations the Secretary of the Navy had had a fund over which he had control. Does the gentleman understand that he would have been authorized to pay out of that fund this sum of money?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do. The report of the Secretary of the Navy was simply that the fund out of which he had paid for the employment of vessels during the whole war had run out. He therefore applied for an appropriation to make it good.

Mr. POTTER. He therefore wanted a fund provided to pay for this vessel.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The military took possession of the vessel.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Under what law could the Secretary of the Navy have made this allowance?

Mr. GARFIELD. Under the general authority to make expenditures necessary to carry on the war.

So much as to the method by which this bill has come from the Committee on Appropriations. But, before leaving that subject, I wish to say that as to all claims in the nature of unadjudicated claims, it has been the uniform practice of the committee during the three years I have been connected with it to report them back and have them referred to the proper committee. I think with my colleague [Mr. LAWRENCE] that this claim ought to have gone in the first instance to the Committee on War Claims; but the Committee on Appropriations had obtained jurisdiction of it, probably before there was any Committee on War Claims; and when the claim was revived, it was naturally referred to the committee that had had charge of it. We felt that it came to us as a sort of legacy from another Congress when the Committee on War Claims did not exist. We simply directed a re-examination of the case, putting it in the hands of a new member of the committee who had never examined it and had not even been a member of the committee in the last Congress. We asked him to go over the whole ground and make his own report, which he did.

Mr. HALE, of New York. But the gentleman will bear in mind that before the Committee on War Claims existed the Committee on Claims had just as complete jurisdiction over this case as the Committee on War Claims would have now. Therefore it seems to me that the proper course for the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress was to report back the case and have it referred to the Committee on Claims, where it properly belonged, as it is not a matter of appropriation but clearly a claim.

Mr. GARFIELD. Personally the Committee on Appropriations would be glad to be relieved of everything outside of their regular bills; but as this matter was referred to us, and as it was really an unsettled question, until we had gone over the whole case, whether we ought not to include it in one of our regular bills, we felt that it would be doing injustice to the parties concerned to let the matter sleep after the regular bills had been reported; therefore we laid the case before the House for its consideration. So much for the mere method by which the case came to the House from the Committee on Appropriations.

I now wish to call attention to some points that have been touched upon by gentlemen who have discussed the merits of the bill. The jurisdiction is here. This bill has been considered by a committee of the House to whom it was regularly referred. It has been reported, and is on the Private Calendar, and the House is to-day sitting as a court on the merits of the bill. To refer it now and thus delay it, is neither just nor in my judgment necessary for the good order and the proper execution of the business of the House. If the amount named in the bill is too large let it be reduced; if the reasoning of the committee is wrong, reject the bill. I have no other care than that the House shall simply meet the merits of the case.

Now a word as to the merits. In all the arguments of gentlemen against the bill they have omitted one fact in regard to what they call the libeling and confiscation of the vessel. In the first place the vessel was seized by the rebel authorities without the connivance or consent of the owners and put into the rebel service. Afterward she was recaptured, or rather she got back into the lines of the United States service; and it appeared that one trip was made, one load was carried each way, after the compulsion of the rebel authorities was taken off. For that act of voluntary carrying——

Mr. POTTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask how this vessel got back into our service?

Mr. GARFIELD. She was recaptured.

Mr. LOWE. O, no; the report does not say so.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The report says she was seized.

Mr. LOWE. The report says she got back into the hands of the owners.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. She was seized by the United States authorities.

Mr. GARFIELD. On that state of facts a proceeding was had; and on a mere statement of the case the judge decided that technically under the law she was subject to confiscation; and a decree of confiscation was pronounced. But what did the same judge say? Here I ask the Clerk to read what I believe has not yet been read either by the Clerk or by any gentleman who has discussed this question; I refer to a clause at the foot of the second page of the report—the indorsement that the judge himself made and his recommendation in view of the equities of the case.

The Clerk read as follows:

The United States vs. The Steamer Clara Dolsen, her engines, tackle, furniture, &c.

The Clara Dolsen was condemned because of a voluntary trip made between New Orleans and Columbus, as stated in the agreed case, (Exhibit F.) In my opinion the Secretary of the Treasury may safely remit the forfeiture thus incurred, on the ground that the trip was made without the consent or connivance of the owners, the case showing that they were residents of a loyal portion of the United States, and it failing to show that they were guilty of any disloyal acts or practices.

S. H. TREAT,
District Judge.

Mr. MAYNARD. Supposing this vessel to have belonged, as the report states, to loyal owners; to have been seized by the confederate authorities and afterward taken by our own forces; where, in the opinion of the gentleman, does the title to the property belong after the vessel returned to our possession? Does the right of postliminy attach to the vessel?

Mr. POTTER. It does unless she was condemned for having gone to the other side.

Mr. MAYNARD. I propound this question because it is a very important one in its results. A great deal of property belonging to loyal owners—not vessels, but personal property of other descriptions—was appropriated in the same way and was afterward reseized. Upon the answer to the question which I put turns very largely, it seems to me, the right of owners of such property to compensation.

Mr. GARFIELD. The testimony in this case was not submitted in print, as perhaps it might have been; but it was examined by the committee that had charge of the case—the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, I call the attention of the committee to the indorsement on the part of Judge Treat. He himself declares that the owners of the vessel were in no way responsible, that they had no knowledge whatever of any employment of the vessel voluntarily in the service of the rebel government, and on that basis he recommended to the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the decree of confiscation. Then follows a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury remitting the decree. What does that amount to? It amounts to legal delivery, legal transfer of the property back again to the owners themselves. It amounts to the declaration it was their property. In other words, the decree of confiscation was annulled under the provisions of the law, and the property thus used in fact during the time of its employment by the Government of the United States was the property of the loyal owners of this vessel.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact he does not exactly state, the facts upon which Judge Treat rendered his decree. If he will look a little more closely at the statement of facts upon which the judge made his recommendation he will see where the defect of his statement is. The judge distinctly stated, in rendering his judgment, she was first impressed into the service of the rebel government and after having been under that impressment for some time she afterward made one voluntary trip in the service of the rebel government. Now, the gentleman from Ohio does not mean to imply Judge Treat rendered his judgment on that statement of facts, that there had been voluntary service to the rebel government on the part of this vessel, and almost in the same breath stated there had been no such service.

Mr. GARFIELD. The judge ruled that the last trip was made without the consent and connivance of the owners of the vessel.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Right there is the distinction. The parties themselves conceded it was a voluntary trip, which of course means a trip with the assent of the parties who had the right to act on the part of the owners. Judge Treat himself said the owners themselves had no knowledge of it, but the party authorized to act for them, which was doubtless the master of the vessel, did give his assent.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is where my friend's "doubtless" comes in. He is so correct a logician that he uses the word as he ought to use it, and when he uses the word "doubtless" it means that he supposes it was so. But the fact is that those who ran the vessel during the voluntary trips were not the agents or employés of the owners at all.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Then the vessel could never have been held, and under that condition of fact the decree of confiscation would not have been rendered.

Mr. BURLEIGH. You say that this is a court and we are to settle this bill as a court. Now, sir, what is there in this bill to guide us in making a settlement? You have not given the size nor the age nor the value of the vessel. You fix the price to be paid at a rate forced upon the United States, because they had the vessel in use and could not give her up within two months. It appears, however, by the report the Government gave her up as soon as it could. Notwithstanding, you have charged at the rate of $150 a day for the whole time the Government had possession of the vessel.

Mr. GARFIELD. I come now to the point of the question of the gentleman from Maine. If it be clear, and it seems to me it is clear, the time during which this vessel was employed by the Government of the United States was the time in which it was using the property of private citizens and for which the legal officers of the Treasury and of the Navy Department conceived themselves and understood themselves to be under obligation to pay, then the whole questions turns upon how much pay and for how much time? The time is plainly fixed and limited simply by two facts, the date when the Government began the use of her and the date when the Government ceased to use her. There can be no doubt here. Those are dates plainly and unmistakably fixed. The number of days is four hundred and forty-one. How much ought we to pay for the use of a vessel in time of war for four hundred and forty-one days? There are several ways of measuring it. In the first place appraisement of the vessel has been named. The appraisement was made at a time when she was used as a hospital-ship, when she had suffered much damage.

Mr. HALE, of New York. No, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes, sir; her condemnation came long after her use by the rebel authorities.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The appraisement was on the 19th of December, 1862. The four hundred and forty-one days for which she is charged began on the 18th of December, 1862, and ended on the 4th of March, 1864.

Mr. GARFIELD. That does not meet the point I make. She had been used by the rebel authorities before. The appraisal was made before repairs were made, and without any degree of accuracy the cost was put down at $45,000.

Mr. HALE, of New York. That was the time the Government held on to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. Another item throwing light upon the appraisal was the amount the Government proposed to pay for her after she was ordered to be delivered up. They employed her for two months, and offered to pay $150 a day for her use and kept her beyond the time they agreed to employ her. It is fair to presume that was regarded by the Government as a fair valuation of the services of that vessel, for they kept her beyond the time by their own voluntary motion.

Mr. HALE, of New York. This was after the four hundred and forty-one days. It was not until she was kept longer than the four hundred and forty-one days that for the last two months they paid for her under stress of circumstances. The four hundred and forty-one days were before that.

Mr. GARFIELD. When she was less valuable as a vessel than she could have been before.

Now, the suggestion has been made by several gentlemen here that it is an enormous thing to pay $66,000 for the use of a vessel for four hundred and forty-one days that was appraised at less than that sum; and the question naturally arises how long should a vessel be required to be used to pay for her own price. Let gentlemen try that method of reasoning, and go here to a livery stable and hire a saddle-horse by the month, and I ask how long will it take you to pay the value of the horse in livery hire? Hire a horse for two years, and you will have paid for him at least once and a half over. Now, instead of a horse take a vessel on war business, with war risks, liable to be blown up at any time, liable to suffer anything that may happen by the casualties of war, to be used as a hospital, especially to be infected as a fever hospital, or to be used in any other way—are we now at this distance of time quite competent to say that $150 a day is a large or exaggerated sum?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does the gentleman know that there are no war risks on vessels used by the Government, because when the Government takes them it pays for them if they are lost in its service?

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not talking of insurance. The testimony submitted to the Department of the Navy, and a large portion of which I hold in my hand, shows that $150 a day was the smallest figure, the smallest estimate made by experts, as the gentleman who has special charge of this bill informs me. The Secretary of the Navy took the smallest estimate as the sum to allow. The Committee on Appropriations were unwilling to allow the payment for the whole time, believing we ought not to allow it, except after the date when regular action by a Department of the Government had been had; and limiting the time, we made the amount $66,000 instead of the $90,000 or $100,000 asked for by the Secretary of the Navy.

Now, if this is too much cut it down. If the claim is not good kill the bill. The Committee on Appropriations know nothing about it except from the facts as submitted. And I have made these remarks because I do not consent that claims shall be whipped round from committee to committee, or that by any intimation it shall be claimed that the Committee on Appropriations has improperly passed this claim.

I ought to say for myself that I have not given this matter that personal attention which would make me so familiar with it as I ought to be in discussing it. I remember, however, that the general course of the history of the case was very carefully stated to the committee by Judge MARSHALL as a sub-committee in the last Congress, and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK] in this Congress, and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that the claim was founded on justice.

Mr. POTTER. This case seems to me to involve questions of a good deal of importance. I am not without doubts about it, but on the whole am inclined to think that there is some merit in this claim. I shall endeavor to state to the committee as clearly as I can my reasons for thinking so, and at the same time I am open to receive further light on the subject.

In the first place the case was, I think, a proper one to be dealt with by the Committee on Appropriations. It came here on a letter from the proper Department, asking an appropriation of money for a liquidated debt which that Department decided to be due. Under those circumstances it was obviously proper for that committee to take cognizance of it, and the Speaker in the ordinary course of refering executive communications could not have done otherwise than have referred the communication to that committee.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, has stated that this property having been captured by the military forces of the country, the title was thereby lost to the original owner. And the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MCKEE,] who was a provost marshal, and therefore, I assume, learned in that branch of law, tells me that when in war the military seizes personal property of the enemy and holds possession of it for twenty-four hours the title is thereby divested. I assume for this case that that is so.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Halleck says "firm possession."

Mr. POTTER. I suppose twenty-four hours would be firm possession.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes; very firm possession. Firm possession by the military authorities passes the title to the captors. That is the general rule of military law. It does not apply to vessels seized on the ocean, and the rule has been changed by statute as to some other property.

Mr. POTTER. Then I will assume that that is so. But I do not myself see that that fact need control us one way or the other in our action on this bill, and for this reason: The confederates took possession of this vessel. They may thereby have divested the title of these owners. But by and by the owners got possession from the confederates. The vessel got in some way recaptured by, or back into the possession of, the owners, and she was in possession of the owners on a fixed day, the 5th of July, 1862. On that day they had retaken and then had full possession of their original property, and on that day the United States took the vessel from them by its naval forces and had her libeled in the courts. On what ground? Not that the confederates had once had firm possession of her, and thereby divested the loyal owners' title, but that she had been voluntarily employed in the service of the rebellion. She was condemned and declared forfeited on that proceeding. But the Secretary of the Treasury, under the authority which the law gave him, remitted the forfeiture.

She was thus, so far as those proceedings were concerned, as much the property of her owners after that remission as on the 5th day of July, 1862, when they were in full possession, a possession which would have continued but for the Government seizure and libel; which after the remission of the Secretary should not, it seems to me, prevent her owners recovering compensation for her use thereafter, as if she had never been seized by our Government. I repeat, this vessel was on the day named in this report, the 5th of July, 1862, in the possession of her owners at Saint Louis. They would have remained entitled to hold her but for the judgment of this court, and the judgment of the court was remitted. Now, since the Government, when it wanted to use the vessel, took her from the owners and used her, it seems to me it ought to pay for that use of her, and pay whatever is right.

But here comes the difficulty of this case. The gentleman from Ohio suggests with great force that a vessel appraised at $45,000 cannot reasonably be worth $66,000 for a little more than a year's use. I am not at all competent to judge of the value of this boat's service; but that seems reasonable. One gentleman from Saint Louis who sits near me tells me that he knew this vessel, and that $45,000 was a very low appraisement of her; that she was worth much more than that. We all know that these appraisements are generally made pretty low. So that really on this subject it is difficult for us to decide intelligently. I venture to suggest, however, that the Government ought in no event to be required to pay more for the use of this vessel than her full value when the Government took her.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I rose especially for was again to call the attention of the House to the danger and difficulty of dealing with these private claims in the way the House is compelled to do. We are unavoidably obliged to deal with them on ex parte evidence. There is never but one side heard before Congress, and we have finally to guess at the proper amount to be allowed in the dark. There never was any tribunal in the world worse contrived to do justice to the Government and to do justice to claimants than Congress is, and I do hope that before long Congress will be willing to relegate to some court the consideration and examination of private claims, so that the two parties, the Government on the one hand and the claimant on the other, can be heard in open court, can present witnesses and have them examined and cross-examined, and can have justice meted out according to the decision of an independent tribunal. In no other great and civilized nation is there, so far as I am aware, anything like the difficulty in having claims against the government properly, promptly, and justly determined that there is in these United States. The other great governments of the world furnish some means or tribunals for the prompt and fair determination of claims. The preposterous doctrine that the king cannot be sued, that he can be guilty of no wrong, and that every claim made upon him must be made by petition addressed to his discretion and sense of right is adhered to at this late day in practice in these United States of America more strictly than almost anywhere else. And yet this Government of all others on the face of the earth is the one that ought to have been the first to put this old-time notion upon one side.

Mr. HALE, of New York. While I fully agree with my colleague as to the desirability of sending all claims, where possible, to a court, let me suggest to him that this is precisely the case that could not be sent to a court. It is a case where there is no legal liability on the part of the Government, and the only question is one of equity and good conscience.

Mr. POTTER. Why should not a citizen have a right to go into court and claim as against the Government damages for the taking of his property and the use of it, just as he would have as against a private citizen who took it and used it?

Mr. HALE, of New York. In this case the possession by the Government was lawful under a decree of condemnation that never was overruled, although there was a remittal of the forfeiture.

Mr. POTTER. That may have been a technical bar to any recovery. But I am speaking of what should be allowed if that technical bar be not insisted on. The right way to dispose of this case would, I think, be to refer it to the Court of Claims, and have that court determine what is a reasonable sum to be paid to the owners for the use of this vessel. There all concerned can have testimony taken and an open trial, and that would be the fair way to dispose of the case.

Mr. KELLOGG. Before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to make one suggestion. So long as this Government takes the ground that it cannot be sued, does not the gentleman think Congress ought to pay an honest debt whenever it finds that one exists?

Mr. POTTER. I do; but I say it would be for the interest of the Government and of citizens that the Government should establish some court in which it could be sued like any other citizen.

Mr. KELLOGG. I agree with the gentleman fully. I say that so long as we take the ground that the Government cannot be sued, it is the duty of Congress to pay an honest debt that it finds to be due.

Mr. POTTER. Of course. The very first object of Government is to maintain justice, and until we establish an independent tribunal to hear and determine claims we must perforce dispose of them here as we best may, blindly and blunderingly though it be. The difficulty is always in finding what is really due.

Mr. STANARD. I will occupy the attention of the House but for a moment. I am not a member of the committee that reported this bill, neither have I been asked to say anything upon the subject by those who are more especially interested as the owners of this boat. But I happen to know the owners of this craft and I happen to be familiar with the vessel.

I observe that there has been some question raised here in this discussion as to the value of the boat and as to her size, &c. I will state for the information of the House, and that justice may be done to those who are interested, that the Clara Dolsen is one of the largest of the Lower Mississippi River steamboats, and that she is a boat that it would probably cost $150,000 to build. I do not remember how old she was when she was put into the service of the Government; but I think that she was not an old boat, and that she was such a boat as the Government required, and that she performed the service which they had for such a craft to perform. I know that during the war the owners of small steamboats that were put into the service of the Government got from $100 to $150 a day for them.

I know that steamers were in very great demand during the war on the Mississippi, and especially upon the Lower Mississippi. I know that they were used for the transportation of troops up and down the river, and for hospitals for the soldiers. They were the only means which the Government had for transporting soldiers up and down the river, and they furnished the only facilities that, in many portions of the South and upon the southern waters, could be furnished for hospitals in which our sick and maimed soldiers could be taken care of. I know the owners of the Clara Dolsen; I know that in our community they had the reputation of being reliable, first-class men. I believe this was a valuable boat, one that would cost at least $150,000 to build. If she was in the service of the Government the number of days this report states, (and I have no right to question it,) knowing the value that was placed during the time on the daily services of steamers, I believe $150 a day, or $66,150, which this committee report in favor of, is not an unreasonable charge for this service.

Mr. McKEE. A very few words on this case. There is one fact that appears to have been overlooked in this report. It is alleged that this steamer was in charge of the confederates, in their care and custody for a while. It nowhere clearly appears how she came into the hands of our Navy. It appears that she got there somehow. I think that ought to be explained. If it was a capture, then she belonged to the Government of the United States, and we have no business to pay for her services.

Mr. HALE, of New York. The report says:

> The Clara Dolsen, a steamer belonging to loyal citizens residing in the North, was, without the knowledge or consent of the owners, and during their absence, in September, 1861, seized by the confederate forces at Memphis, on the Mississippi River, and was, for a time, held and used by said confederate forces. Afterwards the agents of the owners thereof managed to get possession of the steamer, and while in their possession she was seized by the United States naval forces on the 5th day of July, 1862, and libeled in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Illinois, on the ground that "said steamer had been used by the knowledge and consent of the owner in aiding the present rebellion, contrary to the act of August 6, 1861."

Mr. McKEE. Perhaps if you look through the record of the case you will find this to be the fact. They say in their testimony that the confederates took her and ran her up one of the rivers in Arkansas. Then the managers took her down and our Navy came along and captured her. That is none the less a capture. A citizen could not himself have recaptured his own property in the navigable waters of a hostile power. This steamboat was there under the control of the confederates, and the owners could not regain possession. Any confederate officer might with impunity have run up the confederate flag over her at any time. The taking her by the managers was no legal capture. The first legal capture was the capture by the United States fleet. She was then liable to be libeled.

But setting that fact aside, the question is, have these owners any right to come here, having forfeited their property as is shown by the decree of the court, and having lost it by capture by the confederates—have they the right now to come here and demand, as they once did, $91,000 for pay for the use of this steamer?

I take the ground that the owners of this steamboat did well to get her back at all; that is what I believe about it. I am not in favor even of the amendment to pay them $22,000; I would not pay them a cent. They have done well enough to get their steamer back, after she had been twice forfeited, and to receive $10,000 for her services.

On the question of $150 a day, I happen to know of my own personal knowledge, as the chairman [Mr. FORT] does and many others here do, that this boat lay at anchor in the harbor of Cairo without even a vessel rubbing against her. She was in the safest place in which you could put a vessel—anchored out in the harber, not subject to strain or wear from use. She lay at anchor there for four hundred days, safely guarded, properly cared for, and insured by the Government. Now these owners, having forfeited the vessel once, ask that we shall pay them $66,000 for the use of her. I think the House is ready to vote that we shall not pay a cent for her.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, yes; I would pay a cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] to strike out "$66,150" and insert "$22,050."

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is not the first question upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] that the bill and amendment be reported to the House with a recommendation that they be referred to the Committee on War Claims?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no such motion in writing on the desk.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. HALE, of New York; and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 94, noes not counted.

Mr. POTTER. I move to further amend the bill by substituting for it a provision that the owners of this vessel be authorized to refer their claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GARFIELD. The only trouble is that the Court of Claims would probably give the whole $90,000.

Mr. POTTER. I ask that my amendment be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the owners of the steamer Clara Dolsen be authorized to bring their action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the use and service of the steamer Clara Dolsen during the time she was used by the Government subsequent to July 5, 1862, and to recover such sum for the use of the said vessel during that time as would be reasonable, not exceeding, however, in the aggregate her value on said 5th day of July, 1862.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I cannot see any necessity for adopting that amendment. In the first place, it recognizes that there is a claim on the part of the owners of this vessel against the United States Government. I suppose that if they are to receive anything, it is not as a matter of right but because Congress as a matter of grace and favor sees fit to grant it to them. Therefore I do not see why the case should be referred to a court with instructions to find (for that is the effect of this amendment) an amount of damages for the detention of the vessel by the United States. Such a provision would be a declaration to the court that there is a right of recovery, and that the court should consider the question of damages. The court can have no evidence as to the amount of damage beyond what has been presented here at these two sessions of Congress. It will have precisely the same evidence. We have now discussed this question for about an hour and a half or two hours. All the facts and all the arguments bearing upon the case have been presented; and the House has voted that $22,000 is as much as ought to be given in this case. It occurs to me that if we are prepared to give this amount we may as well settle the case here, and that at any rate we should not send it to a court with instructions.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope this amendment will not prevail. After all the discussion we have had, we are just as competent to decide the case now as any court in Christendom.

Mr. POTTER. I certainly have no interest in the matter except to relieve myself of responsibility as a member.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question being taken on reporting the bill as amended to the House with a recommendation that it pass, there were—ayes 62, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HANCOCK and Mr. SHEATS were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 89, noes not counted.

So the bill, as amended, was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM C. BRASHEAR.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2198) for the relief of the heirs at law of William C. Brashear, an officer of the Texas navy.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs at law of William C. Brashear the amount of leave pay per annum, from the date of the annexation of the republic of Texas to the date of the demise of Brashear, it being the rate and pay to which he, Brashear, would have been entitled as an officer of the Texas navy under the twelfth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1858," approved March 3, 1857, in the event he had lived to the passage of said act.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Let the report be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of the heirs at law of William C. Brashear, with accompanying papers, report:

That it appears that the late William C. Brashear was an officer of the navy of the republic of Texas, at the date of the annexation of said republic to the Union. That he departed this life about the 31st of October, 1849; and that at the date of annexation the republic of Texas was indebted to said officer. It further appears to the committee that among other public property transferred to the United States Government, by virtue of annexation, was the naval armament and materiel of the navy of said republic; and that the officers of said navy claimed rank and position in the Navy of the United States as well as pay due them for past services from the republic of Texas. This claim upon the part of said officers was continuously pressed upon the Government of the United States, until the passage of a provision in the general appropriation bill for the Navy, approved March 3, 1857, for their benefit. The language of the twelfth section of the general naval appropriation bill of 1857, referred to, is as follows:

"That the surviving officers of the navy of the republic of Texas, who were duly commissioned as such at the time of annexation, shall be entitled to the pay of officers of the like grades when waiting orders in the Navy of the United States for five years from the time of said annexation; and a sum sufficient to make the payment is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appriated: Provided, That the acceptance of the provisions of this act by any of said officers shall be a full relinquishment and revocation of all claim on his part to further compensation on this behalf from the United States Government and to any position in the Navy of the United States."

Now, the passage of this law was a recognition of the justice of the demand and claim of the officers of the Texas navy by the United States; but, as it will be seen, it only applied to the "surviving officers." The accounting officers of the Treasury held that this meant only those who were "surviving" at date of passage of the act. It would seem that a liberal and just construction would have made it apply to those surviving at the time of annexation, and who by virtue of annexation were deprived of their calling and profession; a continuance in which they had insisted was in the spirit of the negotiations which led to annexation.

However this may be, it has occurred to a majority of the committee that inasmuch as Mr. Brashear was an officer of said navy at time of annexation, and did not depart this life until October, 1849, during which time he was prosecuting his claim against the United States, it is within the spirit and meaning of said act of 1857 that the said Brashear should be entitled up to the date of his demise to rate of pay such as other officers received under said act.

The mother of the said Brashear twice obtained reports upon her petition for this pay from committees of the House; the first, made in 1859, was favorable; the second, in 1860, was adverse, but adverse upon the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to support it. Since then the mother of said Brashear has departed this life. His heirs at law now petition for payment of said demand. Believing it to be just and meritorious, the committee report favorably, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, being in lieu of original bill, (H. R. No. 559.)

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. THOMAS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay William B. Thomas, late collector of customs for the port of Philadelphia, the sum of $62,968.28, that being the amount paid by him into the Treasury of the United States on account of an abstraction of funds from the custom-house at Philadelphia by G. Milton Allen, while said Collector Thomas was engaged in the military service, aiding in the suppression of the late rebellion, under leave of absence from the Secretary of the Treasury, and which abstraction was not owing to any fault or negligence of said collector.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to move to amend this bill by inserting after the word "authorized" the words "and directed," so that the first part of the bill will provide "that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed," &c.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Inasmuch as the report in this case has not been read, I hope the gentleman will state briefly the facts.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The report, which is No. 190, is of some length; I will state the essential facts. Mr. Thomas was appointed collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia, and entering upon his duties on the 1st of May, 1861, continued to serve as collector until the 31st of August, 1866. His compensation, including all the emoluments for that period of a little more than five years, was $27,607.74. On several occasions during that period he left his office by permission of the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of raising troops and serving the country in the field. On the last occasion when Lee was threatening the invasion of Pennsylvania, Mr. Thomas tendered his resignation to the Secretary of the Treasury in order that he might enter the military service. The Secretary declined to accept his resignation, but gave him leave of absence to enter the military service, and directed him to designate a special deputy to perform his duties in his absence. He did so. During his absence his cashier abstracted from his office the sum for which this bill proposes to reimburse him. The fact of this abstraction is not only clearly proved, but Allen being arrested and imprisoned, confessed the embezzlement and surrendered all his property, which was sold and the proceeds turned into the Treasury, Mr. Thomas making up from his own pocket the amount of the deficiency, which he did at the urgent demand of the Treasury Department, because he could get relief only from Congress.

This is as clear a case as was ever presented of a faithful officer being legally charged with a sum of money lost in his office, while his own fidelity and integrity have never been questioned, and while all the authorities agree that no care of his could have prevented the embezzlement.

I hold in my hand evidence showing that the pay which he received while in the military service was turned over by him for patriotic purposes in the city of Philadelphia. The cashier who was guilty of the embezzlement was, as I have stated, arrested and imprisoned, and after confessing his offense was held to bail by the local authorities. He then escaped and is now a fugitive.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Are the committee unanimous?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means. I hold in my hand petitions from Philadelphia representing the chief officers of twenty-four banks, the United States officials, the officials of the State government, the officials of the city government, the daily press of the city, and the commercial associations of Philadelphia, all testifying to the justice of the claim and to the high character of Mr. Thomas. I ask the bill be laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that this bill comes from the Committee on Ways and Means. Now I do not doubt the ability of that committee——

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. As to that point, this bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means after discussion in the House. It was referred in accordance with the uniform precedent that it was the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to consider claims with reference to customs officers. It is in the exact line of precedent. I ought to add, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, that the attention of the House was called to this bill when it was so referred.

Mr. RANDALL. It followed the Hillhouse case.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will, Mr. Chairman, more for the purpose of protesting against the practice of referring bills for payment of private claims to committees which have no proper jurisdiction over them than anything else. I think it is high time that practice should cease, and I for one shall reiterate my protest against it on all proper occasions.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. This is not the case of a private claim which ought to be referred to the committee specially charged with the consideration of such claims, but of a claim which was referred to the committee whose special duty under the rules of the House it is to examine into such matters.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am not complaining of the committee or of any gentleman who voted in favor of referring this case to the Committee on Ways and Means. I am complaining of the practice. I expect the bill will pass. I do not propose to interfere with it at all. It only follows the practice of the House, long since established, to indemnify officers who lost money without their fault. I must say, however, I think it is time we should determine we will pay no more claims of this kind.

It is well understood by every lawyer in the House that at common law, if an officer is intrusted with the custody of money and it is stolen from him, he and his bondsmen are not relieved from liability by proof the money has been stolen. The reason why that is the rule of the common law is that otherwise it would induce custodians of public moneys to conspire with persons to rob them or to conspire with their subordinates to rob them. That is the reason of the rule. We had a notable instance of it in Ohio. A county treasurer permitted himself to be robbed. He was gagged, and the work was so successfully done that it came very nearly costing him his life, for he did not happen to be relieved as soon as he expected. He was, however, finally released and in time to save his life. The court decided, he being county treasurer, that he and his bail had to pay the money although it was proved to the satisfaction of the court that he had been robbed. The Legislature of Ohio passed a law to relieve him and his bail from liability. It was afterward discovered his robbery was a conspiracy brought about by himself, and he was indicted and, if I am not mistaken, convicted and sent to the penitentiary for embezzlement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that case illustrates the wisdom of the rule of common law, and it is extremely unsafe for Congress to depart from or disregard any principle of the common law; for there is more wisdom in that law than in anything else. It is based upon principle and reason. Congress has, however, adopted a different practice and I do not seek to resist it, but I think it is time to change it.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio there was no objection to the bill going to any proper committee of the House. The bill itself is clearly right and ought to pass. It followed in its reference simply the Hillhouse case, which took the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means. I think it properly belonged to that committee. It follows the case also of Thomas, of Maryland, which was passed in the previous Congress.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. There are a great many cases pending where principal officers seek to be relieved because of some embezzlement on the part of their deputies or subordinates. There are a great many such cases pending, but how many I cannot say. In my judgment the principle which ought to be established by Congress is that in all such cases the principal officer who is required by law to give security to the Government should be held to the strictest accountability not only for the performance of his own duties, but for the faithful performance of duty by his deputies, because in that case the principal officer, whether he be collector or assessor, or whatever he may be, should be held to a strict accountability, and should be required to take from his deputy a sufficient bond to secure him and the Government against any loss. Now, what I desire to know is whether in cases of this character, in cases of collectors of customs, they are required to take security from an officer of this kind—the officer who in this case was guilty of fault or embezzlement?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The officer who was guilty of the embezzlement was not required to give bonds. At the time he was arrested all the property in his hands was taken and applied in the payment of this claim, and that is deducted from the amount allowed. But he was not required to give bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. That is the point, and the only point, in regard to which I desired to make inquiry, because I think the House should never depart from that principle. Now, if it is true that this deputy or inferior officer is not directly responsible to the collector, and the collector is not required to take bonds from him, I can easily see that the principal officer ought not to suffer from the fault or embezzlement of the inferior officer. But if it were the duty of the collector to take security from the inferior officer, then he ought not to be relieved, because he ought in every case to take that security which would secure himself and the Government.

Mr. MYERS. It was not his duty in this case.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. So I understand.

Mr. MYERS. And Colonel Thomas would not be here if this had not aided to impoverish him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.] The policy of relieving officers from liability has mainly grown up since 1864. Prior to that time it was not the policy of Congress to release public officers from that class of liabilities. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether the collector in this case left the office under the control of the clerk who committed the embezzlement, without requiring any security from him?

Mr. RANDALL. The office was left under the deputy collector.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Yes; the office was left under the deputy collector. The collector, who is legally responsible, was absent by leave. And as I have stated to the gentleman from Illinois, the inferior officer was not required to give bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. The deputy collector gave a bond?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Yes; but the cashier who was guilty of the embezzlement, and of whom I speak now, gave no bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. He gave no bonds, and is not required to give bonds by the law?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. This cashier was appointed by the collector.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. He was appointed as all such officers are—by the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. And not by the collector. Am I to understand that that is the state of the law?

Mr. POLAND. I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] is entirely mistaken in saying that this man was appointed by the Treasury. I understand that these collectors appoint all their own subordinates. That is, they nominate them, they select them.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. But the appointment is made by the Treasury.

Mr. POLAND. That is merely formal.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New York, as representing the Committee on Ways and Means, had this legislation under his eye. I ask him whether it is now the law that a cashier or collector having access to the public funds and having the custody of them is required to give no bonds?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I understand that to be so.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the gentleman from New York thinks that the public funds are properly secured when a man giving no bonds has access to them and control over them?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. That is a general question of law, which at another time I will be glad to consider in company with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] As to precedents, Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a number of precedents running back all the way to 1857, where this principle of relieving principal officers has been acted upon by Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is scarcely any precedent prior to 1864, which is the date of the leading case on this subject.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Eighteen hundred and fifty-seven is before 1864.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Denver case in 1864 is the leading case of this kind; and since then it has become more and more the principle, year after year, to relieve the principal officer of his liabilities, until now a large portion of the Private Calendar is composed of this class of private bills.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This was a case where a collector could have taken a bond, good at common law at all events, from his cashier. Now, is there any precedent of an officer being relieved from the act of a subordinate, from whom he might have taken a good common-law bond?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He cannot take a good common-law bond.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir; he can.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The common law does not require an officer to give a bond. It does not call for a bond at all.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It may not require it, but you may take a bond good at common law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I call for a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS to insert after the word "authorized," the words "and directed;" and it was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House favorably.

JOSEPH MONTANARI.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. The first section authorizes and directs the Secretary of State to audit and allow the claim of Joseph Montanari for services as vice-consul of the United States at Port Mahon, together with loss by exchange; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to the said Joseph Montanari the amount so audited and allowed.

The second section provides that section 21 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856, shall not be construed so as to prevent compensation being allowed and paid out of appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the United States to vice-consuls-general, vice-consuls, or vice-commercial agents, who are not or may not be citizens of the United States.

The third section provides that the act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a question of order, and it is this: Although in its first section this bill is a private bill, in its second section it is a public bill, and it is not therefore capable of being considered in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this bill has been referred to the committee by the House, and it would not be proper for the Committee of the Whole to refuse to consider it under the circumstances.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I move, then, to strike out the second section. I do not believe in this mode of legislating on public matters in private bills.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to strike out the second section.

Mr. HOLMAN. The second section is manifestly not proper here. It does not belong to this bill, and I move to strike it out.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I believe that only three gentlemen have moved to strike out the second section.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I second the motion.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Three gentleman have already moved to strike it out, and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, intended to make that motion, and I had agreed that it should be made. This bill, as it will be seen, in its first section is a private bill for the payment to the claimant of a very small sum of money. The second section is of a general character, and is intended to relieve the difficulty complained of by the Secretary of State, and which has prevented the payment to this party of the small sum due him. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that that committee is considering this very subject and has prepared another bill in relation to it. I hope, therefore, that the motion to strike out the second section will prevail.

Mr. ORTH. I hope the motion to strike out the second section will prevail for the reason that it ingrafts a public law on a private bill.

I will state furthermore that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have an amendment now pending to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill which provides for what is contemplated by this second section. I hope, therefore, that the motion to strike out will prevail.

Mr. MAYNARD. The second section of this bill is manifestly right, and I think we are just in a condition to pass it, with all due deference to any different opinion that may be entertained. It seems to me eminently wise and proper that you should pay vice-consuls and commercial agents, whether they are citizens of the United States or not, because we know that many of those officers are not and cannot be citizens. The provision is here in the bill, and why should we not pass it?

Mr. ORTH. The amendment to which I have referred, prepared by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is also in a position where it can be passed, and it doubtless will be passed when the House shall resume the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. I understand that there is no objection to it.

But this is a bill which in its first section provides for the payment of a private claim, as the title of the bill indicates, and the second section provides a remedy in the shape of a public law. The Committee on Foreign Affairs has already reported a provision on this subject to the House, and it is for that reason that I hope the motion to strike out this section will prevail.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it is in order to move to strike out the second section, I hope that motion will prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is in order and is now pending.

The question was taken on the motion to strike out the second section of the bill; and it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill now provides merely for the payment of a private claim, and I ask that the report in the case be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes, have considered the same, and now present the following report:

Joseph Montanari was appointed by the proper authority, under the diplomatic and consular act of 1856, a vice-consul at Port Mahon, Minorca, and continued to discharge the duties of that office for the period of two months, holding the commission of the State Department, as appears by two letters from that Department, dated December 29, 1873, and January 14, 1874, and a letter from the consul at Port Mahon, addressed to the Department, August 9, 1873. Vice-consuls are appointed to discharge the duties of the consul during the temporary absence or suspension of that officer, and from the nature of the case they are for the most part necessarily residents and citizens of the places where they are acting, since a citizen of this country could not be expected to maintain himself at a foreign place for the greater part of a year, for the sake of the pay of a vice-consul for a small part of a year. It has therefore been commonly practiced under the act above referred to, as appears from the said letters of the State Department, to employ and pay as such vice-consuls citizens of foreign countries. More recently, however, the Treasury Department has construed the twenty-first section of said act to prohibit such payment to any not citizens of the United States. Hence the necessity for the relief proposed in this bill. The Department of State certifies in said letters that Mr. Montanari was properly appointed and did perform the duties alleged, and is properly entitled to the compensation claimed and proposed in this bill to be appropriated; but that he cannot be paid under the existing law as interpreted by the Treasury Department.

The second section of said bill provides for the payment hereafter of vice-consuls properly appointed and acting as such, and who may not be citizens of the United States, and seems to your committee, for reasons hereinbefore set forth, to be necessary to the efficiency of the consular service; and they therefore report back the bill and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

BECK & WIRTH.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2211) for the relief of Beck & Wirth.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Beck & Wirth, dealers in tobacco, of Chicago, Illinois, the sum of $5,773, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse them for money paid on manufactured tobacco under the act of Congress of July 20, 1868, they being entitled to have the money refunded to them under the act of Congress of April 10, 1869, but are unable to produce the technical proof, as required by the Revenue Department, on account of the destruction of the United States collector's, assessor's, and their own books by the great fire of October 9, 1871, at Chicago, Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has in his possession, will be read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Beck & Wirth, of Chicago, for relief, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

The claimants, Beck & Wirth, of the city of Chicago, county of Cook, and State of Illinois, allege that they are and have been for the last sixteen years wholesale dealers in tobacco, cigars, and snuff; that by an act of Congress of July 20, 1868, they were compelled to render an inventory on the 1st day of February, 1869, to the United States assessor of their district, of all tobacco, cigars, and snuff in their possession; and that, after the 15th day of February, 1869, they were compelled to pay the taxes over again on all smoking and fine-cut chewing tobacco and snuff then in their possession, on all cigars after the 1st of April, 1869, and on all other manufactured tobacco after the 1st day of July, 1869. The claimants did pay during the year 1869, to the United States collector, the sum of $8,730.80 upon the tobacco on hand; that, by an act of Congress April 10, 1869, they were entitled to have their money refunded, provided they were able to prove that the manufacturer had paid the taxes on said tobacco.

During the year 1871 the claimants did procure the affidavits, collector's and assessor's certificates, as required by the Revenue Department, to the amount of $8,408.84. The great fire of October 9, 1871, destroyed all the papers in relation to this claim, part of which were in the claimants' safe, and the balance in the United States assessor's office awaiting the signature of the assessor.

As to the credibility of the witnesses, the certificates of the collector and assessor are furnished. As to the assessment and payment of taxes on tobacco purchased in the first district of Illinois, the claimants are unable to present the papers in the shape required by the department, because all the lists and books for the year 1868 of the collector's and assessor's office were destroyed by the fire of October 9, 1871. On tobacco purchased of Joel H. Harris, of Quincy, Illinois, the department did allow the claimants $2,635.84 under date of August 17, 1872, because they were able to furnish the United States collector's certificate of the payment of taxes. For the balance of the claim they are unable to furnish said certificate, on account of the fire, and they substitute therefor the following sworn statements and certificates:

Affidavit of August Beck, of the firm of Beck & Wirth, that they complied with the law and instructions of the act of July 20, 1868; and that the firm of Beck & Wirth paid to the proper officers of the United States the sum of $8,408.84 on goods which they had purchased of manufacturers.

Affidavit of Franz Zanders, that he bought of the United States collector stamps to the amount of $8,408.84 and affixed the stamps to the goods before they were sold.

Affidavit of R. C. Feldkamp, and M. R. M. Wallace, judge of the Cook County court and formerly United States assessor, that all the papers necessary for refunding taxes to the amount of $8,408.84 were made out in the proper form and in possession of the claimants, but destroyed by the great fire of October 9, 1871. Also the affidavit of Ernst Wesner, corroborating the above facts.

Affidavit of Jacob Metzler, that the firm of Beck & Wirth did purchase during the year 1868 tobacco of two manufacturers in the first district of Illinois, for which firms he was agent, and that the manufacturers did pay the United States tax on the tobacco sold.

Certificate of the United States assessor as to the credibility of the foregoing witnesses.

Certificate of C. L. Root, deputy collector, certifying that the firm of Beck & Wirth did pay to the United States Government the sum of $8,730.80 on tax paid on tobacco, also corroborating the statement of R. C. Feldkamp that the papers as set forth were left by him in the United States assessor's office and destroyed by fire on the 9th day of October, 1871, he being at that time chief clerk of the assessor's office.

Certificate of I. D. Webster, formerly United States assessor, that all the books and papers of the assessor's office for the year 1868 were destroyed by fire October 9, 1871.

Certificate of H. A. Plimpton, deputy United States collector, and formerly assistant United States assessor, certifying that the firm of Beck & Wirth did comply with the requirements of the act of July 20, 1868.

Certificate of Herman Raster, United States collector during the year 1871, certifying that all the books and papers of the United States collector's office for the year 1868 were destroyed by fire on the 9th of October, 1871; that he has personal recollection of the facts and statements upon which the claim of Beck & Wirth was based; and that he considers their claim just and equitable.

Certificate of Edmund Jussen, United States collector during the year 1869, certifying that the firm of Beck & Wirth did pay, during the year 1869, taxes on tobacco on which taxes had been paid; and that he is personally acquainted with both partners composing said firm of Beck & Wirth, and that he always found said firm to be honest and reliable in all its transactions and statements.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimants are entitled to relief, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith submitted for the payment of the sum of $5,773.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call for the reading of the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 6, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that Messrs. Beck & Wirth, of Chicago, Illinois, filed in this office a claim for refunding $6,916.62, the amount of stamps alleged to have been purchased by them and affixed to tobacco inventoried by them as required by the act of July 20, 1868, as being in their possession on the 1st day of February, 1869, which tobacco it was claimed had already been assessed and had paid the taxes imposed thereon. This claim was allowed to the amount of $2,635.84 and the balance rejected for the reason that the proper certificates of the officers fully identifying the tobacco as the same on which the taxes had been paid could not be supplied. If these certificates could have been furnished the claim would have been allowed in full. This claim differs entirely from the claims of Messrs. Judd and Berry and McFall, of Saint Louis, Missouri, for whose relief a bill was passed by Congress but vetoed by the President. In the Missouri cases the taxes were imposed on auction sales and assessed on the tobacco cried off, by the State inspectors. The claimants contended that they were the State inspectors of tobacco, and authorized to offer the tobacco at public sale and cry it off, without, however, any power to make a sale. If the price suited, they alleged, the commission merchants who had charge of the tobacco sold the same to the parties to whom it was cried off and paid the taxes thereon. The act of July 13, 1866, imposed a tax on all sales at auction except "sales by or for judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of a judgment or decree of any court, or public sales made by guardians, executors, or administrators." The Missouri State inspectors not coming within the exception, and being authorized by law to offer tobacco at public auction, it was held by this office that they were liable to the tax on auction sales of the tobacco cried off by them, and their claims were therefore rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. In the case of Messrs. Beck & Wirth, the act of April 10, 1869, makes provision for the return of taxes on tobacco, &c., which had been stamped under the act of July 20, 1868, and had previously paid taxes. There was no provision of law for the return of the taxes in the Missouri cases, admitting the commission merchants and State inspectors both paid taxes on the same sales. Messrs. Beck & Wirth's claim could not be allowed in full for want of proper proof of identification as required by this office.

Very respectfully,

J. M. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

Hon. M. H. DUNNELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MAYNARD. This is a case that illustrates very forcibly the propriety of sending claims of a certain class, not to the Committee on Claims, but to the committee that has general charge of the subject-matter out of which the claims arise. This claim involves a certain amount of technical knowledge which no one is likely to have unless compelled to obtain it. It belongs to a class of cases growing out of the amendment of 1868 to the internal-revenue laws, changing the tax upon tobacco, and also changing the mode of imposing the tax to the imposition of stamps, instead of the mode that had previously obtained.

That amendatory act provided that all tobacco, except plug tobacco for chewing, after six months from the passage of the act, should be treated as if manufactured subsequent to the passage of the act, and liable to stamp tax, giving the term of six months in which to dispose of the stock which was on hand when the law went into force, and allowing twelve months for disposing of the stock of plug tobacco. The department was slow in issuing the stamps, and did not issue them until November, if I remember aright. The act of 1869 extended the time for six months, in order to meet the hardships arising from no fault on the part of the manufacturers, but because the department was slow in getting up the stamps to be used.

There is an immense number of cases of this kind that have been before the Committee on Ways and Means for Congress after Congress. After looking into the several cases the committee have found that it was impossible to afford relief without embarrassing the Treasury by an immense number of claims and opening a door which of necessity must admit a great number of claims entirely unfounded and improper. And year after year that committee has declined to grant relief in these cases.

I do not wish to be understood as casting any reflection upon this particular case. What I wish to say is that in my judgment, if practicable, we should have some general legislation which would cover all this class of claims growing out of the act of 1868, and we should interpose no special legislation which will either entail a great deal of embarrassment upon the Treasury or will place Congress in the attitude of showing favoritism in respect to particular claims.

There is certainly a great deal of equity in this class of claims, appealing very strongly to the Committee of the Whole and to the House. From the report in this case it would seem to be a very meritorious one. In what I have said I do not wish to be understood as casting any reflection upon this particular case; I am speaking generally of this entire class of cases.

Mr. HALE, of New York. If I understand the statement of the facts of this case and the law of the case as set forth in the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue which has been read, this is a case fully provided for by law; a case where, upon the claimant making proof of prior payment of the tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized by law to afford relief. It seems that these claimants went before the Commissioner and presented proof which he judged to be good as to part of their claim and bad as to the remainder. They now come here and ask Congress to pay the amount the Commissioner rejected.

Mr. DUNNELL. I prepared the report in this case, and am very anxious to say a word or two upon it. I did not suppose it required any remarks. I do not think the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] understands the case.

Mr. HALE, of New York. If the gentleman will allow me to finish my remarks he will see whether I understand it or not. The letter of the Commissioner states that Beck & Wirth applied to him praying for a return of taxes to the amount of $6,900; that on the proof they submitted he remitted two thousand and odd dollars.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me ask right here why he did not remit all.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let me say——

Mr. DUNNELL. Simply because——

Mr. HALE, of New York. I insist upon my right to the floor. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] is quite too impatient.

Now, I say here is a case in which, according to this statement, the full remedy exists before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and I want to know why it is that after the Commissioner, with full power to act, rejects a claim as insufficient upon the evidence, Congress is expected to make that claim good upon the same defective evidence.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will reply in a single sentence. These parties put in their claim for $8,730. They had the proper vouchers to cover only $2,635.84, and this much was allowed. For the balance they had not the proper vouchers, and the Commissioner therefore could not pay the amount. The evidence shows that the vouchers for the amount now claimed were burned in the great fire at Chicago. Congress is now asked merely to allow this amount, which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue could not allow because the vouchers could not be produced.

Mr. HALE, of New York. If the vouchers were once in existence and were destroyed by the fire at Chicago, it is just as competent for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the law to take proof of their loss and allow this payment as it is for Congress.

Mr. DUNNELL. These parties presented that very proof before the Commissioner, who decided that he could not take it; that they must necessarily come to Congress. They are here; and there has been no hesitancy on the part of the committee in recommending the allowance of the claim.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to say one word in order that the House may fully understand this case. The act of April 10, 1869, applies to tobacco manufactured after the passage of the act of July 20, 1868. The report of the committee does not state whether this tobacco was manufactured after that period or not; but that fact makes no difference so far as my action on this bill is concerned. There are claimants before the Committee on Ways and Means for the refunding of tax upon tobacco which was on hand prior to the passage of the law of 1868, and which was not disposed of at the time the limitation of the act of 1869 took effect, and which was thus by the operation of the law required to pay a double tax. In such cases the Commissioner has no power to refund either the original or the subsequent tax.

The Committee on Ways and Means have attempted to frame a general bill to cover all these cases, and to allow the Commissioner to refund the lesser tax, deeming it right that the citizen should not be required to pay a second tax when the proof is clear that he has already paid one tax upon the identical tobacco. I presume (although I am not informed as to the fact) that this case would come within that provision, and that therefore there is a necessity for legislation in the matter; but even if it be not such a case, if it is a case where the tobacco was manufactured subsequently to the passage of the law, so that the Commissioner under the law, upon sufficient proofs, would now be authorized to refund the tax, still the bill ought to pass, because in this case the proofs have been destroyed by fire.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARGARET E. WEST.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 62) for the relief of Margaret E. West.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Margaret E. West, widow of Brigadier-General Robert M. West, late captain in the Seventh United States Cavalry, the sum of —— dollars, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; said General West having died out of the service of the United States, of disease contracted in the service of the United States during the late rebellion.

Mr. RUSK. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to move a substitute for the bill, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret E. West, widow of Brigadier-General Robert M. West, late captain in the Seventh United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EDGAR L. SPENCER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Edgar L. Spencer.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, or cause to be paid, to Edgar L. Spencer, late of the One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, in accordance with the existing pension laws, the arrears of his pension, from the 10th day of December, 1864, to the 1st day of February, 1873, the date from which his present pension was allowed, the same to be paid at the rate at which he is now receiving pension; this act to take effect immediately.

Mr. SMALL. That bill should be amended. As it reads it authorizes and directs the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, &c. I think it should be so amended as to authorize the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask that the report be read. This is for arrears of pension, and I should like to know upon what ground the claim is based.

Mr. SMALL. I ask whether it is not necessary to amend the bill in the particular to which I have referred? I move the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSK. The arrears in this case should be paid, because the fault was not that of the pensioner but of the Government officer.

Mr. HOLMAN. It always is.

Mr. RUSK. Not at all. The claim was filed within five years, with all the evidence. It was the fault of the Government and not the fault of the pensioner that the claim was not acted upon. Therefore we cannot plead the statute of limitation against this pensioner, because of our own fault.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the committee, I will briefly state what are the facts of this case. I submitted the bill and report in this case from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. On the 14th of February, 1864, this man enlisted in New York. On the next day, while in the line of duty on his way to the rendezvous at Fort Porter, he received an injury in his foot by which he lost a portion of it. He was retained in the service until December following, when he was discharged disgracefully, having neither pay nor allowance made to him, on the ground that it was supposed he had fraudulently enlisted, and had received the injury to his foot before his enlistment. The records of the War Department were in that way until January, 1873. He had received neither pay nor allowance. In January, 1873, the War Department corrected their record, and gave him an honorable discharge. In February, 1873, he was granted a pension commencing from that date. Now, Mr. Chairman, what he asks is that he may be allowed a pension commencing from the time when he was discharged in December, 1864, the Government having discharged him in disgrace and allowed him neither pay nor allowance, and only amending their record in 1873, so that he could obtain no pension up to that time.

Mr. HOLMAN. The precedent proposed to be established is an important one. All those who went out to defend the honor of the United States should be as far as possible placed upon the same level. Here an exception seems to be made to the general rule in reference to granting arrears of pension. I ask that the report be read in this case; and inasmuch as it is now late and the bills already laid aside to be reported have to be acted on to-night, I submit it is time the committee rose.

Mr. COX. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 49.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That, on the 14th of February, 1864, said Spencer was mustered into the One hundred and seventy-ninth Regiment New York Volunteers, at Buffalo, New York, and on the next day, while proceeding to the rendezvous at Fort Porter, and while in the line of his duty, he received an injury to his left foot, causing a loss of a portion of the foot; but he was kept in the service until December 10, 1864, when he was discharged without pay or allowance, upon the assumption that he was injured before he enlisted; and his record remained unchanged until January 3, 1873, when, upon proof that the injury was received after enlistment, a full and honorable discharge was given him, entitling him to full pay and allowances, which have been paid him; and subsequently, upon his application a pension of five dollars a month was granted him, commencing February 1, 1873.

His application could not be filed earlier on account of the error in the record, nor until the error was corrected. The letter of the Assistant Adjutant-General, informing him of the correction of the record, is dated January 6, 1873, and states as follows: "I have to inform you that the records of this office have been corrected so as to show that George L. Spencer, One hundred and seventy-ninth New York Volunteers, was discharged December 10, 1864, on surgeon's certificate of disability, because of injuries received while in the performance of his duty as a soldier. He is entitled to pay and allowances from date of enlistment to date of discharge. Application for settlement of his accounts should now be made to the Second Auditor of the Treasury."

The delay in obtaining the pension was by the fault of the Government in making a false record, which also kept him out of his pay and allowances for more than six years. He now asks for a pension from the date of his discharge December 10, 1864, to February 1, 1873, when the pension was granted him; and the committee are of the opinion that the decision of the House was not intended to cure a case like this, where the delay in applying for a pension was caused by the fault of the Government.

Wherefore the committee report back said bill, recommending that the title be amended by striking out the words "for the relief of" and inserting in their stead the words "granting a pension to," and that the bill so amended do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a very unusual case. It seems this soldier was never in the service at all, but was wounded going to the place of rendezvous. It seems his foot was injured before he reached the rendezvous. He was never able to render service as a soldier. I am in favor of the most liberal policy, but I do object to this system of favoritism. All these men who have periled their lives in our service ought to stand on the same footing. If we pension one let us pension the others. I say that the Committee on Pensions has no right and that Congress has no right to discriminate as a matter of justice among these men.

There are many soldiers who served you faithfully for three years and went out of your service and who have received no pension, on account of delays by your pension office in not granting pensions within the five years limited by law. There is no good reason why this should be made an exceptional case. If it had been the case of a soldier who had served you on all your battle-fields, that perhaps might have made this case an exception. But that is not this case. I am not going to object to the passage of this particular bill. At the same time I do object to this system of favoritism. I insist that the Committee on Pensions should provide by general law, applying to all the soldiers alike, in reference to the right of pension.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I understand the gentleman's objection to be that this man, having but one foot, is not on a wa.. footing.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have been in session now for five and a half hours. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let us dispose of another bill. The next is a pension bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on my motion.

The question being taken on the motion that the committee rise, there were ayes 31, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MRS. EMILY L. SLAUGHTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2354) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Slaughter.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask that the bill be put at the foot of the Private Calendar.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

THE WYOMING AND TA KIANG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 782) for the relief of the officers and crew of the United States ship Wyoming and the Ta Kiang.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the report in this case may be read.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill will occupy a great deal of time.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I hope the committee will not agree to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] has the floor. Does he yield for the motion that the committee rise?

Mr. MYERS. If after the reading of the first paragraph of the report there is any objection, I will consent to its going over.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield for a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. MYERS. I am still holding the floor. I ask to have the report read as part of my remarks.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. If the gentleman is on the floor for the purpose of making remarks, he is entitled to it. If he is not on the floor for that purpose, I make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. MYERS. I promise that if after the reading of the first paragraph of the report there is any objection to the bill I will myself move that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is an unusual practice to read the report before the bill is read.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I hope that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] having got through some of his claims, will not object to others.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not a claim before Congress.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. The gentleman from Indiana has occupied the floor half the time to-day; now let us do business.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest that by unanimous consent this bill stand to be taken up first in Committee of the Whole next Friday.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. As the title of the bill has been read, it will necessarily have the first position.

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill has not been read.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw the call for the reading of the report, and move that the committee rise.

The question being taken, there were ayes 88, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FORT reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report sundry bills with the recommendation that they do pass, some with amendments and some without amendments.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. THOMAS.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia, with an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the words "and directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EDGAR L. SPENCER.

The bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Edgar L. Spencer was reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with an amendment to the title.

The amendment to the title was to strike out the words "for the relief of," and to insert in lieu thereof the words "granting a pension to."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that amendment is wrong, and that the title was right as it originally stood.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is evidently wrong.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the bill by striking out the provision that the bill shall take effect immediately after its passage. All bills do that.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is surplusage and ought to be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 16, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SWANN and Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN,] representing the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] representing the Committee on Ways and Means, both claim the floor.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I desire to proceed with the bill in relation to moieties. I desire to say that the Committee on Ways and Means heretofore have deemed that they were performing their duty by not occupying the time of the House. The time has come when they think the public interests require that they should ask for a portion of the time of this House for a few hours to consider a bill of great public importance. If the Committee on Appropriations should give us this day it cannot possibly interfere with the public business, because the appropriation bills are so far advanced that the committee having them in charge at the other end of the Capitol have already more work than will occupy them for a fortnight, whereas the committee to whom the moiety bill would go is without any business from the House.

I think it is only fair to the public interest, only fair as between the committees of the House, that at least a portion of this day should be conceded to the matter of great public interest with which I am charged. I trust, therefore, the Committee on Appropriations will not antagonize this subject.

Mr. SWANN. I should be very happy to meet the views of the gentleman over the way——

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the bill?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I am asked what the bill is. It is a bill to amend the customs-revenue laws and abolishing moieties.

ADDITIONAL BOUNTIES.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have considered by the House at this time a bill reported by the Committee on War Claims, which is so manifestly just that I think there will be no objection to it. It is House bill No. 3303, to extend the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill provides that the time for filing claims for additional bounty under the act of July 28, 1866, and which expired by limitation on the 30th day of January, 1874, shall be revived and extended until the 30th day of January, 1875; and that all claims for such bounty filed in the proper Department after the 30th day of January, 1874, and before the passage of this act, shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without refiling.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on War Claims to which this subject was referred are unanimously of the opinion that the time for filing claims for additional bounty ought to be extended for one year. I trust there will be no objection.

No objection being made, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. LOWE. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs, for consideration at this time, a bill to further provide for the sale of certain Indian lands in Kansas.

The first section of the bill provides that those persons who, by the provisions of the second section of the act entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, are entitled to purchase for cash the lands occupied by them at the appraised value thereof, shall be permitted to make payment for said lands at the land office at Topeka, Kansas, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, in three equal annual installments; the first installment to be payable on or after the 30th day of October, 1874, and the remaining two installments annually thereafter, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 30th day of October, 1874.

The second section provides that those persons who, by the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indians lands in Kansas," approved February 19, 1873, are entitled to enter and purchase for cash the lands in said act set forth, shall be permitted to make payment for the same at the land office at Independence, Kansas, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in two equal installments; the first installment to be paid on or before the 30th day of September, 1875, and the remaining installment within one year thereafter, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 30th day of September, 1875.

Mr. LOWE. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I reserve my right to object until an explanation is made.

Mr. LOWE. This bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs and is approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It creates no new rights of purchase, but simply extends the time already authorized for a year as to a part, and for two years as to the other part, requiring interest to be paid on the deferred payments, so that there will be no loss to the Indian fund. It creates no new rights of sale or purchase, and simply extends the time for purchasers to make their payments.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is only a question in regard to the payment.

Mr. LOWE. That is all.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Has this extension been before granted?

Mr. LOWE. It has not.

Mr. KASSON. Who are the purchasers?

Mr. LOWE. The actual settlers on the land, who have been authorized to purchase the land at an appraisement already made. It simply divides the payments into one and two years, instead of requiring them to be made all in one payment.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. What special reason is there for this extension of time?

Mr. LOWE. Because these settlers are obliged to pay five or six dollars an acre for the land, and the hard times render it impossible for them to make the payments as now required.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Is that the only question involved in the bill?

Mr. LOWE. That is all.

Mr. KASSON. Are there any large bodies of this land held by persons not living on the land?

Mr. LOWE. Not any; it is all held by those who are living on the land.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. What effect will this bill have upon the liability of the Government to pay interest to the Indians prior to the sale of this land?

Mr. LOWE. I am not aware that it has any effect in that respect. This bill requires interest to be paid on the deferred payments, so that there will be no loss to the fund.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Interest to be paid by the settlers?

Mr. LOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. It is a matter between the settlers and the Indians directly, with which the Government has no concern.

Mr. LOWE. That is all.

Mr. KASSON. There is only one additional point that occurs to me. The bill speaks of those who are "entitled to purchase," apparently contemplating future purchasers, instead of those who have purchased.

Mr. LOWE. O, no; it applies simply to those who are already entitled to purchase by the law of 1873. It has no prospective action.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to limit this bill to actual settlers.

Mr. LOWE. That is exactly the effect of the bill now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move to add to the bill the following:

Provided, however, That this act shall only apply to actual settlers on the land so purchased.

Mr. LOWE. I have not a particle of objection to that provision; but it is all covered by the law now in force.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is not covered by this bill.

Mr. LOWE. Very well; I accept the amendment.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. I see that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] whose constituency is supposed to include the Indian tribes, is not present. Has he seen this bill and approved it?

Mr. LOWE. O, yes; the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SHANKS,] a member of the Indian Committee, approves the bill.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3352) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LOWE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HENDERSON.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3208) for the relief of John Henderson; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

FORT SAINT PHILIP CANAL.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3353) to provide for the construction of the Fort Saint Philip Canal, in the State of Louisiana, and its maintenance as a national public highway; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

LAND ENTRIES UNDER HOMESTEAD LAWS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands, I ask unanimous consent to report for immediate passage the bill (H. R. No. 367) to legalize entries of public lands under the homestead laws in certain cases.

The bill was read. It provides that in all cases of entries of public lands made prior to the 1st day of July, 1870, under the act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, where the affidavit required by section 2 of said act was made before the clerk of the county of the residence of the person making the entry, without having first made the settlement and improvement required by the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act amendatory of the homestead law, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1864, said affidavits be legalized and confirmed, so as to have the same force and validity as if the provisions of said last-named act had been strictly complied with.

The second section provides that this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out the last section as surplusage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment, which will be regarded as agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. SENER. I am directed by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, which for some time past has been investigating the expenses, disbursements, and general management of the western judicial district of Arkansas, to ask leave that the testimony, statements, and exhibits which have been taken may be printed and recommitted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

BOZEMAN LAND DISTRICT, MONTANA.

Mr. MOREY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Public Lands, for consideration now, the bill (H. R. No. 2642) to create the Bozeman land district, in the Territory of Montana.

The bill was partly read, when

Mr. BECK called for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] from the Committee on Ways and Means, proposes to call up the bill abolishing moieties, and the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN,] from the Committee on Appropriations, desires the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. SWANN. Mr. Speaker, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill is now pending as unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole; the Committee on Appropriations are very anxious to have it disposed of; and, on behalf of that committee, I do not feel authorized to assent to the proposition of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House must settle the question.

Mr. BECK. The Appropriation Committee of the Senate have now four or five appropriation bills, while the Finance Committee of that body has received nothing from us. We ought to be sending them something, so that they may be at work.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to appeal to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] to consider the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] and allow this important bill touching the revenue of the country to be considered. It is necessary that it should go to the other branch as early as possible. Now, if they have three or four appropriation bills undisposed of, will it not facilitate business if the gentleman from Maryland will yield in order that we may send over one of our bills?

Mr. SWANN. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts we are exceedingly anxious to dispose of these appropriation bills. The Senate have several of the appropriation bills before them, but have not yet acted on one of them.

Mr. ORTH. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Maryland will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question will be taken first on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 54; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS and Mr. SWANN as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Mr. DAWES demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the condition of these two motions?

The SPEAKER. There are two privileged reports from two privileged committees. The Ways and Means desire the attention of the House to the moiety bill, and the Appropriations to the diplomatic and consular bill. It is for the majority of the House to decide. If the House goes into committee on the diplomatic and consular bill, of course that settles the question. If the House refuses to go into committee, it will then proceed with the consideration of the moiety bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the Chair will state that we cannot adjourn finally until we dispose of the appropriation bills.

Mr. SENER. I object to debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we will save time by not having the yeas and nays called.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 94, nays 74, not voting 122; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

During the vote,

Mr. ORTH stated that the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SHERWOOD, was detained from the House on account of illness.

Mr. BECK stated he had seen Mr. LAMAR this morning, when he said he was sick and probably would not be able to come to the House, and as he has not answered he is no doubt absent on account of illness.

The reading of the names, by unanimous consent, was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CONGER was granted leave of absence for two days from to-day.

LIMITATION OF DEBATE.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before going into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I move that general debate be limited to one hour, save that when the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] moves his amendment for the reorganization of the consular service, he may have half an hour.

Mr. NIBLACK. I rise to a question of order. The House has agreed to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I make the point of order that it is too late now to move a limitation of the general debate. That should have been done preliminary to going into committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks, by unanimous consent general debate shall be limited as he has suggested.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would have submitted it before, but the yeas and nays were called and I could not make it then.

Mr. NIBLACK. I merely make the point as a matter of practice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

MOIETIES.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I ask unanimous consent be now given that the moiety bill be taken up, to the exclusion of all other business, on Tuesday next after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Tuesday morning next, after the reading of the Journal, it will be the duty of the Chair to recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] and all that can interfere with his bill will be the House voting to go into the Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. BURROWS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate on the bill is limited to one hour.

[Mr. COX addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that the first reading of the bill has been dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. When the gentleman from Ohio formerly asked that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, I said wait until the general debate is through.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not now object, although it has been usual up to this time to have these bills read the first time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, and read the following:

For ministers resident at Portugal, Switzerland, Greece, Belgium, Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Ecuador, Colombia, Bolivia, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, at $7,500, each, $105,000.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying a few words.

I feel called upon as a duty which I owe to a constituent of mine and a well-known citizen of New York, to state the manner in which he has been treated for the last fifteen years by the republic of Bolivia. Joseph H. Colton, a resident of the city of Brooklyn and a neighbor and a life-long friend of mine, was employed by the republic of Bolivia in 1858, through its officers, to publish the grand map of the republic of Bolivia. They agreed to give him $25,000 in gold. We were then on the best of diplomatic relations with Bolivia. The agents of that government had the power of their government to make the contract. They made the contract with Mr. Colton; and from that day until this, although we have been on the best of terms with Bolivia, although we have annually sent our ministers there and received hers here, not one cent except the sum of $2,000 has been paid to Mr. Colton.

Mr. SWANN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether complaint has been made to our authorities at the State Department?

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Complaint has been made to our authorities at the State Department ever since 1859 annually; it has been made through our ministers in Bolivia and ever since 1859 annually they have received promises; and have been told by the government of Bolivia that there should be paid to Colton the amount he claimed. The indebtedness which is now admitted to be due to Mr. Colton is even placed in their Blue-Books. Interest has been added from time to time by the government of Bolivia until it amounts to about $41,500 in gold. The Secretary of State, however, says that he has no authority in this matter to do more than has been done, and unless some other remedy is adopted by this Government the amount will never be paid. The Secretary of State says he has annually repeated that request, that he has annually received a promise to pay, and that he has been constantly put off from time to time with no payment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is this anything more than a contract on the part of the government of Bolivia to pay this gentleman a certain amount?

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I will state a further fact, and then the gentleman can draw his conclusions himself. I am not positive whether it is or is not. The contract was directed to be made by two gentlemen, an engineer and a high officer of the Bolivian government. They came to New York and made it. John Cotton Smith, of Connecticut, at that time was our representative there. He pressed the Bolivian government for payment. They agreed to pay the amount and have agreed from year to year ever since to do so. On the 1st of February, 1872, after the Bolivian government had promised and repromised it passed a decree, which I will ask the Clerk to read. It is an extract from the Blue-Book of Bolivia.

But before the decree is read, I will state that the loan there asked for—$10,000,000—was obtained in London. The Bolivian government placed itself in this position, that they not only made this contract but made a decree for it. They pledged in connection with it their religious faith to pay, as is shown in this decree. After they received the money, $10,000,000, from London, they left something ov $2,000,000 in the Bank of England. But still in the face of this decree and the fact of getting the money they still refuse to pay this amount.

I ask the Clerk to read the decree of the Bolivian government.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Translation.]

MINISTRY OF FINANCE AND INDUSTRY,
La Paz, Bolivia, February 1, 1872.

In view of the contract made in New York, on the 21st, of September, 1858, between Joseph H. Colton, of the one part, and Juan Ondarza and Juan Mariano Mujia, of the other part, for the engraving and publishing of ten thousand maps of Bolivia, for the sum of $25,000 in gold; in view also of the decree of March 8, 1858, authorizing the making of the said contract; also the laws of August 12, 1861, and October 27, 1864, which order payment of the sum due the claimant; also the financial law of the republic for the year 1865, which recognizes the debt, including interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and difference of exchange, in the sum total, at that time, of $38,000: It is hereby acknowledged and declared, that the claim now made by Joseph H. Colton, through his attorney, Hinton Rowan Helper, is just, and entitled to preference in payment: In virtue whereof the government of Bolivia, desiring to maintain the national credit, recognizes as now due the claimant, by way of principal, interest, and difference in exchange, the full sum of $51,985 in Bolivian currency, or, as otherwise expressible, the sum of $41,588.54 in gold, to be paid religiously out of the first funds that are obtained from the loan authorized by the Congress of 1871.

Take notice of this, and pass it to the Director General of Accounts, for the registry of the sum of $41,588.54 in gold to be paid to Joseph H. Colton.

Sign-manual of His Excellency,
PRESIDENT MORALES.

By order of His Excellency,
GARCIA,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Certificate of Minister Markbreit.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
La Paz, Bolivia, February 6, 1872.

I, the undersigned, United States minister resident in Bolivia, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original decree; which said original decree is deposited in this legation.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of this legation.

[SEAL.]

L. MARKBREIT,
United States Minister Resident.

NOTE.—Although this loan for $10,000,000 was raised in London in June and July, 1872, only four months after the date of the decree, yet Bolivia has not paid one cent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I hope the committee will grant me a few moments longer.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose there is no objection to the gentleman adding a word or two and finishing his remarks.

No objection was made.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I would say that I do not propose any particular remedy. I leave that to the good sense of the committee. But here is a poor man, seventy-three years old, who sent no agent to Bolivia to get this work, but the agent of that country came to his place of business in the city of New York, where he has been a map publisher for the last half-century. He has through his publishing house given a great deal of intelligence and cheap intelligence to the country; he has printed maps for all nations. This old man has waited ever since 1858 for the government of Bolivia, which is in good diplomatic relations with this Government, to pay him the money which he is entitled to, and I ask gentlemen of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in their wisdom to adopt some remedy by which before he dies he can receive what is justly due him from the government of Bolivia.

Mr. ORTH. If the gentleman desires an answer now to his question I will give it to him in half a minute.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Certainly; I have no objection.

Mr. ORTH. In the early part of the session I received a letter from the attorney of Mr. Colton, requesting that the Committee on Foreign Affairs should take no action on his claim until after the month of May, and it is in obedience to that request that no action has been taken by that committee.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I am obliged to the gentleman from Indiana for the information; but would say that now is the middle of May, and the only time I know of when I can represent the claims of this old man to this House. My communication has been with Mr. Colton direct, and he is very anxious that this House and the country shall know all the facts. He has employed an attorney who has visited Bolivia, and he finds that the maps which he sold to the Bolivian government for $2.50 apiece have been resold by that government for ten or twelve dollars apiece in gold, and that three or four hundred of the maps were sold to the government of the Argentine Confederation for as much as twenty dollars apiece in gold. The Bolivian government have made a large profit by reselling these maps.

Mr. SWANN. I would inquire if the gentleman gets his facts from the claimant himself?

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. The facts I state are taken from the Blue Book of Bolivia. I have them here in printed form, given to me by Mr. Colton. He has the affidavit of the man who originally made the contract and the official communications of the Bolivian government to our Government printed here, which if I had time I would read. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] had listened carefully to the reading of the decree of the Bolivian government he would have seen that it recites everything which I have stated. I have here a letter from the secretary of the Bolivian government to Mr. Colton and also a letter from the president of the Bolivian government to Mr. Helper, Mr. Colton's agent, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary Terraza to Mr. Colton.

[Translation.]

DEPARTMENT OF GOVERNMENT AND FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
La Paz, Bolivia, April 3, 1873.

SIR: This department has received your communication of the 15th of February last, and inclosed in it a copy of the one you addressed, under date of the 14th of June, last year, to Mr. Leopold Markbreit, then United States minister to the government of this republic.

Having brought the contents of both to the notice of the president of the republic, he charges me to say, in reply, that very soon the debt you claim, for the publication of the map of Bolivia, shall be satisfactorily and completely determined; since, with a view of bringing to an end the involuntary delay which this business has caused to the grave detriment of the interests of the state, the government will obtain from Congress, to meet during the latter part of the present month, the necessary authority for a payment to be made with the funds actually in hand arising from the 17 per cent. which has been deducted from the loan of £10,000* destined for the railroad of the Madeira and Mamoré.

Respectfully,

MELCHOR TERRAZA.

JOSEPH H. COLTON, Esq.

President Frias to Mr. Helper.

[Translation.]

LA PAZ, BOLIVIA, April 17, 1873.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of February 15, I have the honor to assure you of the earnest desire of the Bolivian government to satisfy the recognized debt in favor of Mr. Colton, in virtue of which I dare announce to you that payment will certainly commence to be made during the present year, 1873.

In case there should not be at La Paz any direct representative of the creditor, the matter might be placed in the hands of the legation of the United States.

With this motive, I offer to you my sentiments of gratitude for your amiable congratulation upon my official investiture.

Your affectionate and sincere servant,

TOMAS FRIAS.

HINTON ROWAN HELPER, Esq.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I will say to the committee that here was bad faith on the part of the Bolivian government. These letters were written nearly a year after they had promised to pay the money and after they had obtained their loan in England of $10,000,000; $2,000,000 of which remained in the Bank of England. I will say further that the resident physician to the head of the Bolivian government told the agent of Mr. Colton that by agreeing to give $15,000 of the money to some parties in Bolivia he could obtain the whole of it in full. That is all I have to say.

Mr. SWANN. I was not aware of the existence of any such claim against the government of Bolivia. I do not know what approaches here have been made to the State Department, or what has been their decision in reference to it. The suggestion of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. ORTH,] gives us the first information of the existence of such a claim. I should judge from the statement of my friend from New York that this claim has never been properly examined and reported to this Government. It does not come here sanctioned by any authority whatever. I should consider it very extraordinary if the State Department should take up a claim without being satisfied that it was brought before this Government in a proper shape, in a shape that would justify its being entertained and acted upon by the State Department. I am satisfied that if there is merit in this claim, if it has been brought before the authorized agents of this Government in that quarter, it will receive the attention and consideration to which it is fairly and justly entitled. But for the State Department to undertake to settle a claim which has not been adjudicated and confirmed in such a manner as to justify action upon the subject, I think would be going beyond the limits of their authority.

We do not stand here as agents of the Bolivian government. It is not our purpose, nor is it our right or duty, to interfere in contests which may have sprung up there between private individuals and that government. We are not running the Bolivian government; we are endeavoring to take care of our own. And to act in connection with a foreign nation in reference to this matter would be transcending the authority which has been delegated to the State Department, and might lead us into errors and difficulties which we should avoid. I therefore say that this is not a question between the Government of the United States and the government of Bolivia until the claim has been so matured as to make it necessary for the Secretary of State to communicate with the Committee on Appropriations or other committee authorized to act upon the subject, which will examine into the claim; and if it be a just one I am satisfied it will receive all that attention to which it is fairly and justly entitled.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Without saying anything in reply to the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon the amendment.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I renew it. I do not understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMAKER] moved this amendment with the intention of having action on it, but for the purpose of enabling him to submit a statement to the committee. To that extent it seems to me the remarks which he has made call for some suggestions in reply.

I understand that this claim of Mr. Colton upon the government of Bolivia grows out of a private contract between Mr. Colton and that government. He is a voluntary creditor of the government of Bolivia. The contract does not take on any international aspect whatever; it does not call for any investigation by this Government, except so far as the Government may be disposed to exercise its friendly offices in order to help Mr. Colton to recover his money. Foreign individuals are all the time becoming voluntary creditors of this Government by purchasing our bonds, and of every State by purchasing their bonds, and of every railroad corporation in the same way. But the governments of those foreign individuals would not undertake to collect those bonds of the corporations or of the States or of the Government of the United States, because that is a matter of private contract and one in which the Government is not called upon to interfere, and in which the creditor takes the risk himself.

I have no doubt whatever that the State Department or the President himself would do anything within the limits of friendly intervention in this matter, on the suggestion of Mr. Colton, to endeavor to persuade the government of Bolivia to fulfill its contract. But it does not occur to me that this is a matter in which the Government, in good faith or in any other way, is called upon to do more than to use its friendly offices to help this creditor to get his money again. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read the following:

For minister resident at Uruguay, also accredited to Paraguay, $10,000.

Mr. POTTER. I move to strike out the clause just read. I do this because I believe this to be as absolute an abuse as any now authorized by law at all. Five minutes is not very long in which to explain to the Committee of the Whole the particulars of this proposition. But while I endeavor to do so I beg the attention of those gentlemen on the majority side of the House who are anxious to reform abuses. Uruguay is a little country lying at the mouth of the La Plata River, in South America. It has one and only one port of any consequence—Montevideo. To-day no government, so far as I have learned, upon the face of the earth, except some of the other South American governments, sends any minister resident to it. Uruguay sends no minister to us, and we sent none there until after the 3d of March, 1869, when Congress passed a law directing our minister to the Argentine Confederation, on the other side of the La Plata River, to be also accredited as minister to Uruguay.

There was prior to that time another South American state, known as Paraguay, which lies up one branch of this same La Plata River a distance of about fifteen hundred miles from Montevideo. It had previously accredited to it a United States minister. But a war broke out between Brazil and the Argentine Confederation and Paraguay, and their minister was withdrawn. In the year 1870, to make a place for somebody I presume—for no other reason outside of the lunatic asylum can be assigned for the action of the Government in that respect—Congress established a mission to Uruguay with a minister resident accredited also to Paraguay, fifteen hundred miles distant, and gave him a greater salary than we gave to any other minister in South America, with one exception. It was as if a representative had been sent by some foreign government accredited to Washington and Georgetown, and Georgetown had subsequently been detached from Washington and attached to Kansas, and the representative authorized to reside in Georgetown.

I find in looking at this abuse, to which I have before called attention, that our minister was enabled but once in the past three years to reach Paraguay. I cannot find in the Government reports that there has even been any correspondence with the minister accredited to Uruguay and Paraguay in these three years, except one dispatch in 1871 and five letters, mainly short, from him in 1872. If gentlemen will turn to the diplomatic correspondence with the message for 1871 they will find nothing from him, and in that for 1872 they will find an account given by Mr. Stevens of his journey to Paraguay in a United States vessel in 1871, after an order to deliver a communication from the President, which, by the way, he was not able to do, but which he forwarded and followed up by this journey, upon which trip a great ball was given him, which he reports. That seems to be the only occasion in four years that the Government representative was ever in that important country at all. Finally, if gentlemen will turn to the correspondence for the year 1873 they will find a communication with regard to Paraguay and its political relations, but it is not from the minister accredited to Uruguay and Paraguay, but from the minister of the Argentine Confederation, which lies in between Uruguay and Paraguay, and the minister to which is therefore perfectly competent to attend to the business of both those countries.

*This is a mistake. The gross amount of the loan, successfully raised in London in the summer of 1872, was $10,000,000. H. R. H.

My attention was first called to this abuse by a member of the dominant party who had himself been a minister in South America, and who told me that $100 a year would pay for all possible service that it was now competent for anybody accredited to either of those countries, I mean Uruguay and Paraguay, to render.

And the House will observe that not only is Uruguay (for the other country has ceased to exist practically and politically) the most insignificant country in population and political importance to which we send any representative, a country below the notice of most of the other nations in the world so far as regards sending to it diplomatic representatives; but it is one to which we never sent any diplomatic representative until the year 1869, when it was found convenient to make this office, to add this sinecure to the other one of Paraguay, to make an excuse for a salary larger than usual, for we at first paid this minister a larger salary than we pay to our ministers to the great countries of Bolivia, Peru, Chili, the Argentine Confederation, or a number of others with which we have a large amount of business, and we still pay, as gentlemen will see by this bill, as large a salary as we pay to any minister to South America, except only to the Empire of Brazil. I do not know who is the gentleman accredited to Uruguay now. I find no correspondence from him.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is there any minister acting?

Mr. POTTER. I understand there is.

Mr. KELLOGG. None appears in the Blue-Book.

Mr. POTTER. If the gentleman will look over the list of diplomatic representatives as furnished us by the State Department, he will find the name, although I do not recollect it at this moment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I find the Congressional Directory gives the name of John C. Caldwell as the minister.

Mr. POTTER. At any rate, whoever is the minister now, there is absolutely nothing for him to do, and it is an unfit place for a mission. Yet we send a minister there and give him a larger salary than is given to our ministers to other countries with which it is more important to have relations.

I know very well that this appropriation is according to existing law; but I want to remind the House of the fact that we have never, at least since I have been in Congress, corrected any of these abuses in regard to the diplomatic service unless we first struck at them in an appropriation bill. We have already passed a paragraph of this bill providing for one minister to five small states in Central America. Four years ago each of those countries had a minister; but we consolidated them by a blow struck at them in an appropriation bill. Therefore I propose to strike out the appropriation for this office in this bill, firmly convinced that in no other way can this abuse be certainly and effectually corrected.

Mr. SWANN. I rise to say a single word in reply to the remarks of the honorable gentleman [Mr. POTTER] who has just spoken. That gentleman is aware that at the last session of Congress a number of these South American republics were consolidated at the instance of another Representative from New York. I was not satisfied at the time that it was prudent for this Government to act in that way without a reorganization of the whole diplomatic system. I am in doubt now whether we have acted wisely in the abatement of any of those ministers to the countries referred to.

In reference to Uruguay I am not prepared to say that it is a very important point; but, sir, Uruguay carries with it Paraguay, which I do consider a very important point in our diplomatic relations. That government is now in a state of transition. It has been approached by foreign governments who have tried to mold it according to their own views and to crush out the republican principle which has heretofore been recognized there.

Mr. POTTER. Will the gentleman kindly tell me whether he knows or can venture to say that the minister who is accredited to Paraguay has ever been there except in the single instance to which I have referred?

Mr. SWANN. I am bound to believe that the State Department has discharged its duties, and that he has been there.

Mr. POTTER. The State Department may have discharged its duties, but he could not get there.

Mr. SWANN. I say it is a matter of the highest importance that we should keep up an active supervision over all these republics that have heretofore looked to the United States for guidance and direction; and I consider Paraguay as in that category. By kind treatment on the part of this Government, by such a recognition as that country has a right to expect at our hands, we may mold that government in such a shape as will favor American interests and may build up an important point in our relations hereafter. Therefore, sir, I opposed the proposition to consolidate those South American republics; and I believe now that it was injudicious. I think, sir, it is worth all the expenses to have our agents there upon the ground in order that American interests may be watched and that the machinations of foreign governments may be counteracted by that sort of vigilance which can only be exerted by those who go there imbued with the spirit of republican institutions and have the interests of this country at heart, as against the interests of those who are endeavoring to mold those governments in the interest of other institutions. Such a policy must inure largely to the benefit of the United States and the furtherance of American institutions in that locality.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. WOOD. I move an amendment to the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I differ somewhat with my colleague as to the importance of this mission. It will be perceived the proposition of the bill is to provide for a minister at Uruguay also accredited to Paraguay. I will state so far as Paraguay is concerned all diplomatic relations with it are almost cut off. Uruguay is situated at the mouth of the river, and is an independent republic. It has one of the most important sea-ports in South America so far as trade with the United States goes. The port of Montevideo is next to Rio Janeiro and Buenos Ayres in its trade and commerce, especially in hides imported into New York. It is one of the principal ports with which we have trade in South America. Certainly for the protection of our commercial interests and in view of the continual warfare existing between the Argentine Confederation, Brazil, Paraguay, and Uruguay we should be represented at Uruguay, and as I understand this appropriation it is to pay the salary of the minister resident at Uruguay who is also to be accredited to Paraguay.

Now, sir, Paraguay is one of the most mysterious, one of the most interesting, and in all its resources one of the richest of all the South American states. We have reason to believe, so far as we have been able to obtain knowledge of that country, it possesses many things which would be of great value and interest to the people of the United States, and we should provide for maintaining commercial intercourse with it. Until very recently it has been involved in very serious difficulties, attempting to resist even the great empire of Brazil. It became involved in all kinds of internal dissensions and rebellion. Brazil has utterly subdued and subjugated it. Indeed it may now be said to exist no longer as an independent nation. Therefore, so far as Paraguay is concerned, I concede nothing is to be gained, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, whether we should not always maintain such position that we can avail ourselves of any opportune moment to reopen and maintain our trade with that country. England has been for a century striving to obtain sole possession of this trade.

The only object I would have in voting to continue this appropriation would be that we might have at Uruguay, in the vicinity of these states, a representative of our Government who at all times would be ready not only to protect the honor of the Government, but to protect our commercial interests and prevent any foreign government, in competition with ours, from procuring or seizing for itself the entire trade of South America. To protect ourselves from exclusion from this trade and from participation in this commerce which will be of great advantage to this country, it is necessary we should have a representative there. Therefore it is I take exception to my colleague's amendment, and hope the appropriation will be voted as it is in the bill.

Mr. ORTH. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] will not prevail, and that we will not at this time make any change in this mission to South America. It ought to be the policy of this Government to keep up the most friendly relations with every portion of the people of this continent. The trade of Mexico, Central America, and South America of right belongs to us; yet we have but little of it.

Now, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] who has just taken his seat has well said, Paraguay is almost a blank so far as population is concerned. She has recently passed through a more terrible ordeal than has been suffered by almost any other nation in history. Under the tyranny of Lopez, Paraguay has almost ceased to exist as a people. It has in fact ceased almost to exist as a nation. Its population was reduced during recent devastating wars from over eight hundred thousand to less than one hundred thousand, and that too in a space of only five years. But peace has once more blessed that country. Nature has favored it as perhaps it has favored no other nation on the face of the American continent. The people are again rebuilding their shattered fortunes. They are upon that immense river which must open its commerce eventually to the world, and we ought to be there with our representative. As that nation rises up from the ashes we ought to be there to greet her with friendly recognition.

This is a small expense, when taken in connection with the vast results which must follow the keeping up of our intercourse with that portion of the American continent. If economy is to be the order of the day in these diplomatic missions it will be much better we should put the pruning-knife into other missions far away, where we keep up great expense without corresponding benefit to the Government. Here is a mission almost in our own waters. Here is a commerce which we ought to control, and which we will control if wise legislation prevails here. I hope, Mr. Chairman, there will be no change in the appropriation heretofore made in regard to this mission on the La Plata.

Mr. POTTER. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say a word in reply.

First, as regards the policy of dealing liberally with South America, I am willing to concede that for this debate as largely as anybody may insist upon it. But I nevertheless ask the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] to tell me what sort of policy it is in dealing with South America to send to the most insignificant state there a representative with the largest salary, and who in fact it would seem does not go there, or at any rate need not go, for any use he can be there.

Mr. ORTH. Will the gentleman allow me to answer his question?

Mr. POTTER. Certainly.

Mr. ORTH. I think it is very wrong policy indeed. This was done when I was not here. I took no part in the process of consolidating the mission to the Central American governments into one mission. I think that was a mistake which the House should rectify.

Mr. POTTER. I agree that this Uruguay-Paraguay mission was not a job such as I would expect the gentleman from Indiana would have had anything to do with.

It is said that this state of Paraguay is so situated that it is important for the protection of our interests and the control of our commerce that we should have a representative there. Why, sir, nobody really goes there as our representative. I challenge the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs or any gentleman on this floor to say that anybody has ever been there as our representative since the mission to Uruguay with Paraguay attached was established, except once, in July, 1871, when our minister went up in a ship of war to Asuncion. I believe that was the only time the American representative has been within the bounds of Paraguay since the great war which desolated that country.

Now, as regards Uruguay it is said that it has the port of Montevideo, a place having an important trade in hides. Why, sir, the whole consular fees there for the year ending June 30, 1873, amounted to $2,300.69. It is down in the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs for a consulate of the fifth class. That is an important place! It is a great deal less important than Buenos Ayres, in the Argentine Confederation, to which Uruguay ought to be attached, and to which, when the mission was first established, it was attached. But when Paraguay got practically wiped out as an independent state, so that nobody could well go there, then, in order to make a convenient resting-place for some gentleman, Uruguay was detached from the Argentine Confederation, with which really it ought to go, and then mythical Paraguay and $10,000 a year added. It was like detatching Brooklyn from New York. One city is across the river from the other and both have exactly the same kind of trade.

We have a consul at Montevideo, but we are I think the only nation on the face of the earth outside of the South American states that maintains a foreign minister at Uruguay—a miserable little country that has but two or three hundred thousand people in it. It had but twenty-nine American vessels clear for it in the year ending June 30, 1873, and has no American trade requiring a minister resident. We are, I repeat—and I ask to be corrected in this if I am wrong—the only nation that maintains a minister there, and it sends none to our Government, and never has; and yet we pay to the ministers whom we have sent to this little insignificant country a larger salary than we pay to other ministers accredited to other South American countries having millions of population.

Now, if that is not an abuse I would like to know what makes an abuse. If that mission is not a sinecure I would like to know what makes a sinecure. The whole diplomatic correspondence of this Government with that state in a year could be written in a day. Only two of the letters received from the minister about Uruguay in 1872 were ever acknowledged by the State Department, as will be seen by pages 707 to 710 of Executive Document No. 1, part 1, third session Forty-second Congress. Yet this was the year of this minister's largest service, and for which we are now asked to appropriate $10,000 a year.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] to strike out the following paragraph:

For minister resident at Uruguay, also accredited to Paraguay, $10,000.

The question being taken, there were ayes 39, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salaries of secretaries to legations at London, Paris, Berlin, and Saint Petersburg, at $2,625 each, $10,500.

Mr. SWANN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph just read the following:

And the Secretary of State is authorized to allow and pay to the secretary of legation, and to the second secretary of legation and to the messenger of the legation in Paris, from the moneys collected at the legation for the transmission of consular invoices, an amount not to exceed in the aggregate $600 in any one year, to be divided and distributed as the Secretary of State may direct: Provided, That the surplus receipts are sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. SWANN. In explanation of that amendment I submit the following letter from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington May 8, 1874.

SIR: For some years past the legation at Paris has been virtually a dispatch agency, where correspondence from other legations and from consulates has been collected and forwarded in pouches to Havre and thence to the United States; and where similar matter from the Department destined for other legations and for consulates has been received and distributed.

This establishment has grown into an important point of distribution. The labor has become considerable—enough to probably occupy the entire time of one person during business hours. The work has been cheerfully done by the secretaries of legation and the messengers of the legation in addition to their regular duties, although detaining them beyond the ordinary business hours.

The expenses of sending the pouches to and from Havre and Cherbourg and the other miscellaneous expenses have been more than met by a postage charge on consular invoices equivalent to the ordinary postage rate, and the surplus money received from the charge has been covered into the Treasury by this Department. The arrangement has proved to be a convenient one for the Government as well as an economical one; but it hardly seems right to impose the labor upon the secretaries and messenger without some compensation, as it cannot be said to come within the range of their duties, however widely construed. It is desirable to have them continue to perform them, and I understand they are willing to do so, on receiving the compensation which would otherwise be paid to a dispatch agent. I recommend for the consideration of the committee an amendment to the consular and diplomatic bill, authorizing such an arrangement to be made, provided the receipts warrant it, and I present herewith for their consideration the form of such a proposed amendment, which it is believed would effect the desired object.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

HAMILTON FISH.

Hon. GODLOVE S. ORTH,
Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For the private amanuensis to Robert C. Schenck, minister to Great Britain, $2,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. I find that the language of that section does not quite correspond with the law. I therefore offer an amendment in that respect without changing the amount.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof as follows:

To enable Robert C. Schenck, minister to Great Britain, to employ an amanuensis according to joint resolution approved January 11, 1871, $2,500.

Mr. GARFIELD. That follows the exact language of the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For consuls-general, consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, $364,500.

Mr. SWANN. At this point of the bill I propose to yield to my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who has charge of the bill for the reorganization of the consular service. I am happy to state, in regard to the labors of that gentleman and those connected with him, that the amendment which he presents here has received the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations, and I presume of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ORTH. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move to amend the bill by striking out from line 63 to line 101, and inserting in lieu thereof what I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Before the amendment is read I desire to say to the committee that it is substantially what is known as the consular bill reported some two months ago from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and as will be seen when it is read, it contains an almost entire revision of our consular system. It has been well known by those whose attention has been called to the matter that some revision of that system has been needed for the last ten or fifteen years. Our consular system, if indeed it may be called a system, has been so far merely patchwork. A consulate was created at one session of Congress and a salary fixed for it, and at another session another consulate was created at some point and a different salary fixed there, and thus it has continued from year to year without any attempt at equalization or at reducing it to anything like a system. In some instances where a consulate was created at a particular point some fifteen or twenty years ago, it was of rather insignificant importance; but the current of events has changed that and made that consulate of considerable importance, and yet there has been no change in the compensation. The reverse of the proposition is likewise true. Consulates that were of importance at the time of their establishment have since, owing to many causes which I need not enumerate, deteriorated in importance, and yet the salaries remain the same.

I might name an illustration of this in the well-known consulate at Havre, established many years ago, and at one time regarded as one of the most important consulates, the salary of which was fixed at $6,000 a year. Since then and for a series of years its importance has gradually diminished, so that now the committee recommend that instead of a salary of $6,000 there shall be a salary of $3,000 only. I name that one consulate as an illustration of the general principle.

Then take the consulate of Bradford, in England, which is an inland manufacturing town. A consulate was established there a number of years ago at a small compensation. The business of that consulate has grown rapidly, and the amount of fees collected there and paid into the Treasury has increased to such an extent as to make that a consulate of almost the first rank. The committee has recommended in this amendment a very considerable increase in the salary at that point.

I might give another illustration: The consulate at Barmen, in Germany, was established, I think, only four or five years ago. Prior to that time there was merely a commercial agency there of very little importance and attached to the consulate at Aix-la-Chapelle. It was erected into a separate consulate, and now the child has outgrown its father. It is of greater importance now than the consulate at Aix-la-Chapelle from which it was taken.

But I will not give any further illustrations; they will be found in the amendment. I wish to state to the committee that the first object of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was to equalize the compensation of our various consuls, and the first consideration that influenced us was in such equalization not to increase the aggregate amount of expense to the General Government. While we took from one consulate and added to another consulate, the average and aggregate expense, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, has not been increased. On the contrary, I find by a statement which I hold in my hand, carefully prepared by the clerk of our committee, that there has been an actual decrease to the amount of eighteen thousand and fifty-nine dollars and some cents.

While I state this, Mr. Chairman, it is due to myself to say that I believe a different course should have been adopted; that we ought to pay to every one of our representatives abroad, if we keep them there, a higher compensation than is provided for in this amendment. But we acted in deference to the known sentiment of this House, in deference to the known sentiment of the country at large, that this is an era of retrenchment and reform, and hence the committee have not felt themselves at liberty in this adjustment of salaries, in this rearrangement and equalization among the different consulates, to make any considerable increase. Keeping that in view, we went through the entire list of consulates, and the result is a decrease of consular salaries to the amount of over $18,000.

I wish to state to the committee that the consular service of the United States is not a burden to the Government. It is the only service under our Government that results in bringing a surplus into the Treasury.

The amount of consular fees collected and returned during the last fiscal year was $646,594. Let me repeat, so that the members of the committee may comprehend it, the amount received by the different consulates and accounted for in the Treasury of the United States was $646,594. The entire amount of expenses under the proposed amendment which I have just offered will be $392,580, leaving a surplus, after paying all expenses, of about $250,000.

We have changed the form of the law upon this subject, by abolishing what is known as the schedule form and adopting the classified form. Now, if any gentleman desires to ask me any question while I am proceeding, I will very cheerfully answer it.

Some of the considerations which governed the committee in their action I will briefly allude to. The first, to which I have already alluded, was not to increase the actual expenses of the consular service. The second consideration was to base the amount of compensation to some extent upon the amount of fees received at the consulate. I wish the committee to bear in mind that we have consuls that are purely commercial agents, who exercise purely commercial functions. We have others who exercise quasi diplomatic functions; and still another class which are stationed in what are known as the non-Christian countries of the world and who exercise judicial functions.

These several views have been taken into consideration by the committee in adjusting these various salaries. For instance, to a consul exercising judicial functions we have allowed a salary commensurate with the importance of the duties which he is called upon to perform, without reference at all to the amount of consular fees received from him and paid into the Treasury of the United States. I will give an instance: The consuls in the Barbary states of Tripoli, Tunis, and Tangiers have paid into the Treasury of the United States the following sums respectively: from Tripoli we have received the insignificant sum of one dollar during the last fiscal year; and yet we propose to pay to our consul there the sum of $3,000 a year. That is because he is called upon to exercise not only judicial but quasi diplomatic functions. At Tunis, where the amount of consular fees is but $17, we pay the sum of $3,000 to the consul. At Tangiers, where the amount of consular fees is but $20, we pay a similar salary of $3,000. So take the three Barbary states, with consular fees amounting to $38, we pay salaries amounting to $9,000. That may seem to be an extraordinary amount, but it is important that to fill those positions you have men of high character and of ability to discharge the important functions devolving upon them from time to time.

For instance take the consul at Belfast, where the fees are about $11,000. We pay him a salary of $2,000 because his duties there are simply of a commercial character. In the third place we take into consideration somewhat the commercial or shipping importance of the consulate. As for instance at Bremen, where the amount of fees are not so large as in some of the inland German towns, but where the duties of the consulate are more complicated and more important, in consequence of its being a large shipping port where the consul has charge of American sailors, of distressed seamen, and of difficulties growing out of the relation of master and seaman. These matters come constantly before him, and he has to adjudicate upon them. Hence we propose to pay him a salary not based upon the amount of fees received by him, but with reference to the importance of the duties which he is called upon to discharge.

Another consideration has influenced the committee, which we have applied to a few consulates embraced in this amendment; that is, a consideration with reference to the expense of living. That consideration has entered into probably half a dozen only of the consulates mentioned in this bill. Another consideration was in regard to the unhealthfulness of the locality, which applies to probably three or four of the consulates.

This amendment provides for the establishment of consuls-general. First, at Cairo, the officer there is designated, and has always been upon our books, as an agent and consul-general. He exercises such diplomatic functions as he is permitted by the Khedive of Egypt to exercise, Egypt itself being a sort of quasi sovereignty, somewhat dependent on Turkey. We cannot have an independent minister there because it is not an independent sovereignty. We do the next best thing—send there a political agent and consul-general. Going there in that capacity, he is charged with the exercise of diplomatic functions.

The next class are consuls-general. We provide for them at London, Paris, Havana, Rio de Janerio, Calcutta, Shanghai, Kanagawa, Montreal, Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, Constantinople, Saint Petersburg, Rome, and Mexico. These have all been heretofore provided for, except at Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, Rome, and Mexico. At those places the consular officer heretofore has been a consul simply, and not a consul-general. We have deemed it more in accordance with the duties of the consular service that at the capital of every important nation there should be a consul-general who should have supervision of the action and accounts of the different consuls in that nation. Hence we have added those I have mentioned to the list.

The consuls, then, enumerated in this amendment, with the exception of the consul at Liverpool, are classified into seven different classes. The consul at Liverpool receives a higher compensation than the consul at any other point named in the seven classes, and hence we leave him outside of any class. His compensation, which has heretofore been $7,500, is fixed by this amendment at $6,000, a reduction of $1,500.

Bearing in mind the general principles to which I have already alluded as forming ingredients in the fixing of these salaries, we have placed in the first class two consulates, that at Hong-Kong and that at Honolulu; the one judicial, the other somewhat diplomatic. The amount allowed to these consulates is $4,000 each, which in the case of Hong-Kong would be justified by the amount of fees, which are about $12,000 a year. At Honolulu the fees amount to less than $5,000 a year; but that is an important shipping point—a place where our sailors stop and where there is a very considerable commercial business which has to receive the constant attention of our consul.

Class 2 is composed of our consulates in China, all of which we place at $3,500, because they are important, not as commercial but as judicial consulates. Each one of those consuls, as members of the House well know, holds court to protect the rights of American citizens and to settle all matters of dispute between them; in other words, these consuls carry with them to that far-off country the laws, customs, and usages of our own country and apply them to the adjudication of the rights of our citizens resident there.

One exception to this class is the consul at Callao, which is fixed at $3,500 on account of its commercial importance as well as in reference to the amount of fees received.

But I will not detain the committee by going through these various consulates. The remaining classes, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, are arranged with reference almost exclusively to the amount of fees received and paid over to the Treasury of the United States. For instance, in class 4 we place all those consuls whose fees exceed $10,000 per annum; in class 5, consuls whose fees are over $5,000 and under $10,000; in class 6, consuls whose fees exceed $2,000 and are under $5,000; and in class 7 consuls whose fees are $2,000 or less.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment which I now send to the desk be read by clauses, so that as we proceed amendments may be offered to any special part.

Mr. GARFIELD. One word before this amendment is read. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] came in and sat with the Committee on Appropriations one morning when we were examing this bill. The Secretary of State was also there; and there were some questions of difference between the judgment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and that of the Secretary of State in regard to the proposed amendment. I understand that now those differences have been adjusted. The total result, as I have figured it out, (and my figures so far as I have gone concur with those of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs,) is a small reduction in the appropriation for these consuls. This answers every question relating to expenditure. The only remaining question, therefore, relates wholly to the wisdom of the readjustment. It is enough for me to say that the change in the condition of a consulate during a course of years by a change in its commercial standing, its falling off or increasing in importance, makes it wise and necessary that there should be from time to time a reorganization and readjustment of the relative grades of consulates. This reorganization now proposed has, I believe, been made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs wisely and well. I hope that the amendment as offered may be concurred in without controversy or debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand from the statement of my colleague [Mr. ORTH] and also that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that the effect of this amendment is not to increase the aggregate expenditure in connection with our consulates.

Mr. GARFIELD. On the contrary, it will result in a decrease of about $18,000 annually.

Mr. HOLMAN. I observe that in some cases the salary proposed to be allowed by this amendment exceeds the present compensation by fees.

Mr. GARFIELD. In those cases the fees reach a very small amount, though I cannot tell how much each of these consuls who are paid by fees receives. But the compensation under this system is so small that it does not pay a person to go there and take the position; but usually some merchant residing in the place performs the duty and takes the fees. But we shall not be called upon to change the figures of the appropriations standing in our bill—at least not to increase them in any way. Possibly they might be cut down about $10,000, though I do not know that that would be wise under the circumstances.

Mr. HOLMAN. The arrangement made of these consulates in this amendment is certainly an improvement on the old system; and if it is not to result in increased expenditure, of course there can be no objection to it.

Mr. ORTH. In answer to my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I will state that this amendment does not comprehend what are called the feed consulates—those whose compensation depends upon the amount of fees collected; it applies only to those that are known as salaried consulates.

Mr. HOLMAN. I notice in the amendment a number of instances where the present salary is fixed at the amount of the fees.

Mr. GARFIELD. One instance of that is at the bottom of the fourth page.

Mr. HOLMAN. And at Copenhagen also the salary is at present $332, being the amount of fees received; but this bill fixes a salary of $1,500.

Mr. ORTH. I will state, in answer to the suggestion of my colleague, that we propose to abolish the consulate at Elsinore, and transfer it to Copenhagen; and of course we increase the compensation, that of the consulate at Elsinore having heretofore been only $300 to $400 per annum, the amount of the fees.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt my colleague has examined the subject thoroughly, and the only possible objection which may be had to this measure would be the possibility that it may lay the foundation for further increase of expenditures. My colleague will observe that during the last two years we have increased our foreign intercourse to the extent of $277,000, but this measure seems to be in the interest of economy.

Mr. ORTH. I am aware of that, but my colleague is also aware we are a growing people, and all the expenses of the Government have necessarily increased. As we grow our foreign intercourse must increase. We expect not only to go where civilization is but to go where civilization is not.

Mr. KASSON. The income has also increased.

Mr. ORTH. Yes, sir; the income has also increased.

Mr. HOLMAN. When my colleague stated that the consular system was a paying system he did not intend of course to embrace all of our foreign intercourse.

Mr. ORTH. I used the words "consular system."

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House general debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. This amendment has been examined by every member of the committee, and hardly needs to be read.

Mr. ORTH. Let the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from line 63 to line 101, inclusive, and insert the following:

SEC. 2. That there shall be allowed annually for the hire of clerks, when actually expended therefor, inclusive of consular clerks, as follows:

To the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, and Shanghai, each, the sum of $2,000.

To the consul at Liverpool, $3,000.

To the consuls at Manchester, Birmingham, Bradford, and Sheffield, $1,000 each.

To the consuls at Sonneberg, Chemnitz, Belfast, Montreal, Hamburg, Leipsic, Lyons, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Bordeaux, and Leith, $750 each.

SEC. 3. That the President shall be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint interpreters to the consulates at Shanghai, Tien-Tsin, Fowchow, and Kanagawa, and to allow them salaries not to exceed, in either case, the rate of $1,600 a year; and to appoint interpreters to the consulates at Hankow, Amoy, Canton, and Hong-Kong, and to allow them salaries not to exceed, in either case, the rate of $750 a year; and also to allow, at his discretion, a sum not exceeding the rate of $500 for any one year to any one consulate in China or Japan, respectively, not herein named, for expenses of interpretation; and that section 6 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of State shall, as soon as practicable, establish and determine the maximum amount of time actually necessary to make the transit between each diplomatic and consular post and the city of Washington and vice versa, and shall make the same public. He may also from time to time revise his decision in this respect; but in each case the decision is to be in like manner made public. And the allowance for time actually and necessarily occupied by each diplomatic and consular officer who may be entitled to such allowance shall in no case exceed that for the time thus established and determined, with the addition of the time usually occupied by the shortest and most direct mode of conveyance from Washington to the place of residence in the United States of such officer.

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July next, the annual salary of consular clerks who shall have remained continuously in service as such for the period of five years and upward shall be $1,500.

SEC. 6. That the following proviso shall be added to section 21 of the act aforesaid:

"Provided, That any vice-consul who may be temporarily acting as consul during the absence of such consul may receive compensation, notwithstanding that he is not a citizen of the United States."

Mr. DUNNELL. The salary of the consul at the city of Mexico has been increased from $1,000 to $2,000, and he has been made consul-general, while the salary of the consul at Vera Cruz has been reduced from $3,500 to $3,000, and it remains in the list of consulates. I move that "Vera Cruz" be inserted between "Vienna" and "Frankfort;" that is between the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth lines.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me make a single statement. I cannot for a moment conceive any reason why the consul at the city of Mexico, really the most insignificant consulate and the most unimportant in the republic of Mexico, where there is no commerce, should be placed ahead of the consulate at Vera Cruz. There is no commerce at the city of Mexico. It has been regarded for many years at least as almost wholly useless to have a consulate there. There is no commerce to be looked after, no sailors to be cared for. Indeed there are very few interests to be looked after by the consulate in the city of Mexico, while the consulate at Vera Cruz is a very important one. We have now a line of steamers between New York and Vera Cruz, and also a line of steamers between New Orleans and Vera Cruz. The commerce at that point is very large. I therefore insist the consul-general to the republic of Mexico should be at Vera Cruz rather than at the city of Mexico. All the mails to that republic from the United States have to pass through the consulate at Vera Cruz. All the dispatches of the Government are first delivered to the consul at Vera Cruz. He has the entire delivery of the mails from the State Department for the entire republic of Mexico. He has more business than all the other officers of this kind in the republic. The salary hitherto of the consul at Vera Cruz has been $3,500 and it ought not to be cut down, and the salary of the consul at Mexico ought not to be increased.

The consul at Vera Cruz is subject to many additional expenses. He is compelled to leave the consulate during a portion of the year, and is also at a heavy expense to keep the office in running order, while the consul at the city of Mexico can remain there the entire year. I have had some experience, having been for one year in the office of the consul at Vera Cruz, and I know very well that it is an important consulate to this Government, while the consulate at the city of Mexico is wholly unimportant.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The Constitution gives the power to the President to appoint consuls, and of course consuls-general, and it would be rather an extraordinary thing if Congress should assume to determine contrary to the advice of the President, or of the State Department which is the same thing, where a consul-general shall be located, where his post shall be. The present consul-general in Mexico is at the capital, at Mexico.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not understand that there is a consul-general there.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There is. The present consul-general is at the capital, and is so put down as consul-general at Mexico.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman will not insist that it is important that the consul-general should be at the capital?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the gentleman had paid attention to the remark I made a moment ago, he would have seen that I put it on a different ground from that. The appointing power has the right of determining where a consul-general shall be located. The consul-general has a certain duty to perform, quite independent of the mere certifying of invoices and other consular duties. He has the supervision of certain consuls within certain limits, and his duties may be entirely separate from the proper duties of a consul, the supervising of invoices and attending to shipping.

At Mexico, the fees of course indicate what the duties of consul simply as such would be. For this duty this salary would be perhaps much larger than there is any need of. But the Department of State, so far as I understand—and they sent the bill, which was the basis of the action of the committee, to the committee for consideration of the reconstruction of the consulates—prefers to retain the officer at Mexico as consul-general. It occurred to the committee that there ought to be no officer of importance of consul-general having less than $2,000 a year salary, and his salary was fixed quite independent of the amount of fees attached to the office or the amount of business transacted by a consul, if that was the grade of the office. We fixed the salary at $2,000 because we determined that if it was important to have a consul-general at all he ought to be paid a salary of at least that amount. So much for retaining the consul-general at Mexico and fixing his salary at $2,000.

Now as to Vera Cruz. The salary there is reduced to $3,000. It has been $3,500. The amount of fees received at Vera Cruz, $1,712.67, being the amount received for the year ending June 30, 1873, is not of course necessarily an indication of the entire amount of business; because it is a seaport, and so there is business in connection with shipping and in connection with seamen who may come to that port, independent of the business that is represented by fees. Still, on the basis which the committee adopted in grading these salaries, we could not see how we could keep the salary at Vera Cruz above $3,000; for the reasons which compelled us to fix other salaries as we have fixed them here would compel us to put it as low as $3,000. At places where the amount of fees received is very much larger, the salaries are fixed here at $3,000. At Manchester, with fees of $29,206, the salary is only $3,000; at Bradford, the same, with fees for three-quarters, of $14,951. In fact only small portion of the consuls provided for in this bill have a salary of $3,000. If the reasons which were satisfactory to the Committee on Foreign Affairs are deemed sufficient this salary should remain as it is, and it seems to me that the salary fixed for the consul at Vera Cruz is large enough.

Mr. ORTH. I renew the amendment pro forma.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] is doubtless aware that almost the entire foreign commerce of Mexico is in the hands of other nations than our own. To-day the Germans have almost entire control of the commerce of the city of Mexico and of the interior towns of Mexico. I recollect a remark that was made to me several years ago by our then minister, General Rosecrans, that the very hams he had for his breakfast were Westphalian hams instead of hams which should be sent from the Mississippi Valley.

How is it that other nations acquire this commerce and retain it? It is because they use the means for that purpose. And, as I remarked a few minutes ago, it is not always in the line of economy to reduce salaries or reduce offices. If by retaining this consul-general at the city of Mexico at the insignificant salary of $2,000 a year, you introduce American trade and commerce, you will get back more than quintuple, yes, a hundred-fold, the amount of salary you pay to that man. Why, sir, should we not take there our agricultural implements, our mining tools? Why should we not take there almost everything that the Mexicans are compelled to import? It is because we have suffered other nations far off beyond the ocean to monopolize the field that naturally belongs to us.

I hope the members of the committee will bear this in mind as we progress with this bill—that these consulates are not mere barnacles, that they are not mere sinecures, and that the object of this reorganization of the consular service is that this Government shall throw its hands out, Briareus-like, everywhere, and that wherever we can give support to commerce that will bring benefit to the nation and its individual citizens we shall do so.

Let me refer the gentleman from Minnesota, for an illustration and verification of this remark and to show him how the Germans, for instance, have acquired such a foothold on Mexico, to the Almanach de Gotha, and he will find that the German Empire has a minister resident at the city of Mexico and has consuls at Campeachy, Colonia, Durango, Guadalaxara, Lunga, Matamoras, Mazatlan, and Puebla. Almost every civilized nation has its representatives at all the principal points in Mexico. That is the reason that the commerce of Mexico which naturally belongs to us, as her nearest neighbor and her sister republic, goes from us and into other hands. I hope that this country will soon realize the necessity of endeavoring to secure commerce, which will enrich us more than any other pursuit.

While upon the floor, I desire to say a word for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] in relation to Uruguay. He stated that we were the only nation that had any diplomatic or consular representative at Montevideo.

Mr. POTTER. O, no; I did not say consul. Every nation has consular representatives there. I said minister. We have a consul there as well as a minister.

Mr. ORTH. Quite a number of nations are represented by ministers and chargé d'affaires.

Mr. POTTER. I see that Germany has appointed a minister there, but he has been appointed since the publication of the book which I consulted.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to make a further remark in reply to the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman has well said that the Germans very largely control commercial matters in the republic of Mexico and we ought to have the business of that republic. I am happy to say to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that to-day we have double the amount of business with Mexico that we had twelve years ago. I tell him that engines manufactured in the United States are now running on the newly constructed railroad between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico, and that American engineers constructed that road. We are now bringing to this country large quantities of coffee and other products of Mexico, and our agricultural implements are going into that country very largely. The new line of steamers between New York and Vera Cruz has a business largely increasing from year to year.

A word with regard to these German consuls to whom the gentleman has referred. They are merely commercial agents, such as we have; but they are allowed to trade. We do not allow our consuls to enter into any business excepting that of their consulates. We pay our consul at Vera Cruz $3,000 a year, and he is not allowed to transact any business at all outside of the duties of his consulate. He has to account for all his fees, and has merely $3,000 a year. When the proper time comes I shall move to transfer Mexico and Vera Cruz from class three to class two, so as to make the salaries attached to those consulates $3,500 instead of $3,000 a year. There are six or seven consuls in the city of Vera Cruz, one from Hanover and from the other states of the German Confederation, and they all do business; they are the traders and chief merchants of the city.

Mr. ORTH. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DUNNELL. I now move to amend the amendment proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs by inserting after the word "Swatow" in line 83 the words "Mexico, Vera Cruz;" and then I shall propose to strike them out where they occur in class three. The effect of the amendment is to transfer those consuls from class three to class two, and I hope there will be no objection to it. I know it is right, and ought to be done.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object to the amendment because no good reason is given for the change. It is true that the salary of these consuls heretofore was $3,500, but the amount of fees received at Vera Cruz last year was only $1,712.67. If the principles on which the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was framed are to prevail at all, this change should not be made.

Mr. DUNNELL. I insist on the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOSKINS. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman having charge of this amendment, in regard to the consul at Toronto. I see by the bill that the salary at present is $3,000, and the committee propose to reduce it to $2,000. I would inquire what reason there is for reducing the compensation of this officer $1,000 a year?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. He receives not only his salary as consul, but emoluments as consular agent. This bill does not interfere with those emoluments or really reduce his compensation.

Mr. HOSKINS. Then I understand that it does not really change the salary?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It does not change it at all.

The Clerk read the following:

Germany:
Sonneberg, Nuremberg, Barmen, Chemnitz, Leipsic, Aix-la-Chapelle.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I desire to inquire whether the consuls at Sonneberg, Nuremberg, Barmen, and other places embraced in the list just read, will have their compensation reduced from what they now receive to $2,000.

Mr. ORTH. Select any particular one, and we can answer better.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Take Nuremberg, for instance. Is the compensation in that case to be reduced, and if so how much?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The compensation, salary, and emoluments received by the consul at Nuremberg for the year 1873 were about $4,000. How much of that was under the head of emoluments, it is not easy to say. I think we have in fact reduced his compensation about $500.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. That is all?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I think that is all. There is a consular agency under the charge of this consul, and the amount the consul may receive from the agency always depends upon the agreement between them.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. That is the only change made?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That is all.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. So that his entire compensation is not actually reduced to $2,000?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Not at all.

Mr. ORTH. I will state furthermore, for I suppose the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] desires full information——

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I do.

Mr. ORTH. To the consulate at Nuremberg is attached the consular agency at Bamberg. The fees received at Bamberg, under the law, were last year $1,099.50, of which the consul at Nuremberg and the consular agent at Bamberg are entitled to receive $1,000, which they can divide as they please. The presumption is that they would divide it equally, which would give the consul at Nuremberg $500 in addition to allowances for rent, &c.; so that altogether he will receive about $4,000.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the first section.

Mr. STOWELL. I desire to move to increase the salary of the consul to Belfast from $2,500 to $3,000. I have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] to offer the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I shall have to object to going back.

Mr. STOWELL. I would like to make a statement.

Mr. RUSK. The amendment of the committee proposes an increase.

Mr. STOWELL. I am informed by the consul at that place that the value of the exports from the 1st of January, 1874, to March 15, 1874, was £476,445, being an increase over last year, for the corresponding period, of £75,000; or, in our currency, about $375,000 for two and a half months. I think the salary here proposed is inadequate to a position of that importance.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It is proper to state, in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. STOWELL,] what he is probably not aware of in regard to the compensation of the consul at this place. We have increased his regular salary $500 on account of the fees received and accounted for by him. In addition to that we give him a clerk at $750, which he has not hitherto had. In fact he gets $3,250 against $2,000 hitherto. I do not think the gentleman ought to complain of his compensation.

Mr. STOWELL. I was informed that the pay of the clerk was $500.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. No; it is $750.

Mr. STOWELL. I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the second section of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 2. That there shall be allowed annually for the hire of clerks, when actually expended therefor, inclusive of consular clerks, as follows:

To the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, and Shanghai, each, the sum of $2,000.

To the consul at Liverpool, $3,000.

To the consuls at Manchester, Birmingham, Bradford, and Sheffield, $1,000 each.

To the consuls at Sonneberg, Chemnitz, Belfast, Hamburg, Leipsic, Lyons, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Bordeaux, and Leith, $750 each.

Mr. SWANN. I move to substitute for this section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That there shall be allowed for the hire of clerks, when actually expended therefor, as follows: To the consul-general of Havana and consul at Liverpool, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $3,000 for any one year; and to the consuls-general of London, Paris, and Shanghai, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; to the consuls-general at Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, and Montreal, and to the consuls at Hamburg, Leipsic, Lyons, Manchester, Beirut, Belfast, Birmingham, Bradford, Chemnitz, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Fayal, Nuremberg, Leith, Naples, Stuttgart, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500 for any one year.

Mr. SWANN. I desire to say, with reference to this amendment, that I took occasion to examine into this matter particularly in connection with the officers of the State Department. I thought that some of the estimates of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. ORTH,] were too low; that the Government would not be able to carry on these consulates unless there was some slight increase in the compensation. The result of that interview with the State Department was to bring the gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. ORTH] into communication with the State Department, in order that this whole matter might be discussed and they might agree upon what would seem to be proper and necessary in reference to these various offices.

The Committee of the Whole will observe that my amendment relates to the assistance to be afforded to the consuls at the different points named. I am authorized to state that, as a result of that conference, the honorable gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH,] the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, agreed to accept the suggestions submitted by the Department of State upon a careful examination of this whole subject and to appropriate the moneys absolutely required to enable the Government to carry on the consular system.

I will say further that upon an examination of the various items and amounts demanded by the Secretary of State as absolutely necessary to enable him to run the consular system, it appeared necessary that some small advance should be made in order to place him in possession of the necessary funds to increase these salaries to the small extent indicated in that amendment.

I concur entirely with the gentleman [Mr. ORTH] representing the Committee on Foreign Affairs in his recommendation in reference to the reorganization of the consular system. His propositions seem to be in the right direction; and all that I now ask is that a sufficient amount in reference to these offices named in that amendment may be placed in the hands of the Secretary of State, to enable him to sustain this Government in carrying out the reorganization which has thus been proposed to the House.

The Secretary of State, so far as I am informed, is desirous of carrying out the amendment recommended by the Committee on Foreign Affairs; he desires only that he may be placed in possession of the funds which will be absolutely required to enable him to perform this duty, and he has asked for no more than will be necessary for that purpose. If you do not allow him what he has demanded as indispensable for running the Department, it may give rise to confusion, and may perhaps be attended with consequences which this House would be glad to avoid.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have unfortunately not heard all that has been said by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN,] but I understand the purport of his amendment to be this: In the amendment offered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs it is provided that "there shall be allowed annually for the hire of clerks when actually expended therefor, inclusive of consular clerks," the amounts specified. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland strikes out the words "inclusive of consular clerks," and as I shall show presently changes the character of this section. It also adds three or four consulates to the list of those for which clerks are provided. In addition to that, it increases the salary of the clerks at several of these places.

I think that the amount of the increase involved in this amendment would be some ten or fifteen thousand dollars. It would undoubtedly be as much as $10,000. If this measure is necessary, of course it ought to be adopted. The fact that it will cost $10,000 is no reason for not doing the thing, provided it is something that ought to be done.

Mr. SWANN. The reason that I have given for this amendment is that the Secretary of State, who has examined all these consulates, and is well acquainted with the expenses of running them and the difficulty of procuring help in various quarters, has from all his knowledge, obtained by constant intercourse with these parties, been brought to the conclusion that the service cannot be run under the amendment as reported.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understand that the Secretary of State recommends the amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SWANN. It has also been considered by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who, I am happy to say, concurs in it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let me call attention to the operation of the amendment with reference to a single consulate. Take, for illustration, the consul-general at Havana. By this bill we allow at Havana $2,000 for clerk hire. This is the same amount that was paid for the same purpose in 1873; but, in that year, two of the thirteen consular clerks were detailed for service there.

Now, the committee should understand that in one bill we provide for two classes of consular clerks. In the first place, there are thirteen consular clerks who are appointed and who receive an annual salary; they are under the direction of the Secretary of State; he sends them to whatever consulate he thinks is in need of them. One of these clerks is now at Rome; some are at Shanghai, two are at Havana. They are distributed wherever throughout the consular service the State Department deems them necessary.

Now this bill makes appropriation, it will be observed, for these clerks, inclusive of consular clerk hire. For instance, we appropriate $2,000 for clerk hire at Havana. Now, if the Secretary of State sees fit to send two of these thirteen consular clerks to Havana, then this appropriation will be used to pay those clerks; but if he pleases he can send his consular clerks to places not provided for in this bill at all, and then the appropriation in the bill will be used for the purpose of paying consular clerks employed at these places. For instance, suppose the Secretary of State should choose not to send any of these thirteen consular clerks to Havana. There have been two there during the past year; but if he should choose hereafter to withdraw those clerks and send them to some place not provided for in the bill, the consequence would be that the consul-general at Havana would have $2,000 with which to supply their place.

Now the committee having provided for hire of clerks at London, Paris, Havana, Shanghai, Liverpool, Manchester, Birmingham, Bradford, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Chemnitz, Belfast, Montreal, Hamburg, Leipsic, Lyons, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Nuremberg, Bordeaux, and Leith, there are thirteen places besides which may have these consular clerks assigned to them; and with these the consular service, we think, will be sufficiently taken care of.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, my own judgment is that the Secretary of State has made this recommendation without, perhaps, considering that the committee in allowing these salaries has taken into account this matter of clerks in connection with the salaries, and in some cases have raised the salaries where hitherto the consuls have had consular clerks, and have arranged it so that with the clerks provided in this bill the pay of the consulates will be more than it has been hitherto.

It may be possible that all these clerks are required, but it should be borne in mind that every one of these clerks for which we provide in this bill is additional to those appropriated for hitherto. Besides appropriating, as we have done in this bill, enough for clerk hire for each one of these places, we leave the thirteen consular clerks to be sent to other places which are not provided for. And so the whole appropriation in this bill for clerks is in addition to the service which has been had hitherto.

Now, Mr. Chairman, although we put it at $1,000, every one knows in some of these places more clerk labor can be got for that price than can be performed by any one of these consular clerks. In some of these places for $700 or even less a clerk can be procured. I trust the committee will take cognizance of the fact I have already stated, that the entire appropriation provided for in this bill is in addition to what has hitherto been provided.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the gentleman from Vermont to this fact: Not only is the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland a large increase, but there is an actual increase of appropriation for clerical service to the amount of $15,750 by the amendment proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs over and above the provision of the pending law and the general appropriation made heretofore.

We have appropriated in this bill for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all missions abroad $100,000. We have also appropriated for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper and of all the missions abroad, such as stationery, book-cases, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, rent, freight, postage, and other necessary miscellaneous matters, including loss by exchange, $131,850.

This $231,850 of contingent expenses involves an increase of appropriation over and above what is provided for in this amendment. The amendments are an increase of appropriation. I submit therefore to the gentleman from Vermont whether this second section is proper at all, whether the appropriation heretofore made is not sufficient.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let me call the gentleman's attention to one thing as an illustration. We have taken into account these consular clerks in fixing the salary. The salary of the consul at Liverpool, as the gentleman will notice, is reduced from $7,500 to $6,000 by this bill. The fees received for the year ending June, 1873, amounted to $9,000. We reduced the salary to $6,000 and gave him $3,000 for clerk hire. In fact we pay no more for Liverpool, including clerk hire, than before.

Mr. HOLMAN. But heretofore the consul at Liverpool received large fees.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. No more than before.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary was $7,500.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. But there was a consular clerk assigned to Liverpool.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the salary?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. One thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, the effect of the pending amendment is on the whole a further enlargement of the contingent fund. Out of the contingent fund of course expenses of this kind will be paid. I wish to call attention to the fact that while the pending bill increases the contingent fund and is in harmony, except so far as it increases the appropriation, with previous consular and diplomatic appropriation bills, that fund is still further increased by the amendment to the extent of $15,750 for clerical hire. I object to this creation of a new class of employés at a large increase of expenditure. Instead of the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland being adopted the whole proposition in my judgment should be stricken out. All gentlemen are aware, who have studied this subject, that these foreign positions are mere sinecures. Some of them have duties connected with our foreign commerce which are important, but generally they are in fact mere sinecures. They have attached to them salaries which are handsome, and I see no good reason why any further increase of expenditure in that regard should be permitted.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN.] It is true in the amendment I have the honor to present here, representing the Committee on Foreign Affairs, we provided for a limited amount of clerical hire. I am satisfied it is too limited; and while the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland nominally increases the consular expenses, I wish the members of the committee to bear in mind actually it does not. For instance, consuls heretofore compensated by fees received, and not by any fixed salary, have always been allowed in the adjustment of their accounts at the Treasury Department a reasonable compensation for clerical hire. By the amendment the committee has now adopted we provide for the transfer from the feed list to the salaried list of quite a number of consuls. A salaried consul receives no allowance for clerical hire unless authorized by statute, whereas a feed consul is, as I have already stated, entitled to clerical hire, to be paid out of fees received according to the allowance made by the Treasury Department on recommendation made by the State Department.

While I cannot just now specify in the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland what particular consulates have been thus changed from fees to salaries, I am satisfied there are five or six of them that have been thus changed; and being thus changed, they are not entitled to clerk hire unless you give it to them. But as far as the Treasury itself is concerned and the amount of money going into the Treasury is concerned, we make no change by the adoption of this amendment. I wish to state on behalf of this consular service that we can afford to be liberal with a service that pays to the Government $250,000 every year over all expenses; an amount which is increasing every year. In favoring the adoption of this amendment I differ from several members of my own committee, but I believe if it is not adopted the State Department will find itself subjected to great inconvenience.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no Department of this Government carried on with more economy than the State Department. Its force everywhere in all its branches is kept at low figures in a state of efficiency. Even in the Department here they work an hour more than in any other Department. And I have always found it safe to trust the Secretary of State with an estimate which we have not ourselves the means of looking into.

The Secretary of State asks that this amendment shall be adopted. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is satisfied that the Secretary is right, and I hope the amendment offered by my colleague on the committee will be adopted.

Mr. KASSON. I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to say that I think that feature of the committee's bill which uses the words "inclusive of consular clerks," ought to be retained in the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

I understand it to be affirmed alike by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and by the gentleman from Maryland, who has charge of this bill, that the Secretary of State declares to the House through the committee that this amendment in regard to clerks ought to be adopted. Now, sir, with me this is a very strong recommendation, and sufficient reason that this committee, with the information which it derives from standing committees of the House, should adopt this amendment.

The gentleman from Ohio has anticipated in part what I intended to say—that at the head of the State Department is a gentleman not only of perfect honesty and integrity, but of a high sense of honor in respect to the obligations he owes to Congress and the public. When a gentleman who, in addition to the possession of those qualities, is peculiarly devoted to the business of his Department, to the hard solid work of his office as that gentleman is, tells us that one branch of the service with which he is well acquainted needs four or five additional clerks, I myself, with all the rigid views of economy which I entertain, am not disposed to say him nay.

I have done my share of grumbling, Mr. Chairman, against what I considered extravagant expenditures in other Departments of the Government, and now, when a question comes up in relation to a Department against which we cannot charge one single piece of extravagance, I wish, for my part, to do honor to that Department and its chief, and to say with the utmost sincerity that in my judgment its administration is perfectly honest and perfectly honorable. And I think that is a reason why we should act with a just discrimination in respect to the recommendations which that Secretary sends here. He tells us that they need additional clerks, at small salaries. I know in the case of many of these consulates, where you send raw consuls from this country, in too many instances there is a special need of a clerk acquainted with the language, with the local customs, and with the laws applicable to consular duties. And when a Secretary of State, in whose honor and integrity this House confides, informs us that the public service requires five or six additional appointments, let him have them.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to oppose the amendment. I do not understand this eulogy on the economical management of the State Department when the fact is before the committee that the entire appropriations made for the maintenance of our foreign intercourse in 1871, when the increase of expenditures began, was $1,041,347, on which there is an increase in the amount appropriated in this bill of $277,128. And this cannot be accounted for by any considerations drawn from the depreciation of our currency, for our consular and diplomatic officers are paid in gold.

Mr. ORTH. The gentleman says that these officers are paid in gold. I would ask him, do they not also make their expenditures in gold?

Mr. HOLMAN. That has nothing to do with it. I was attempting to show that this increase could not be accounted for, because of the depreciation in our paper, or anything of that kind, because these gentlemen are paid in gold. I merely wished to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the expenses of our foreign intercourse have been increasing at the rate of $100,000 a year, and that this has taken place in a Department which in regard to the amount of its service is absolutely stationary. There can be no reason, no public reason, why the expenditures of that Department should be growing at the rate of $100,000 a year in gold. Yet gentlemen talk about its economy, the economy of a Department of the Government which remains stationary in its service, and which without any apparent reason increases its expenditure at that rate. To say that under that state of circumstances the Department is administered with economy, is a proposition, it seems to me, which is not accordant with the state of the facts.

The truth of the matter is that the young gentlemen who fill the clerkships at the consulates abroad are young men who go abroad for pleasure. These places are made for them. You can name, perhaps, a dozen places where our consuls and commercial agents need competent clerks, but as a general thing these places are known to be mere sinecures.

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will allow me a moment. I know he does not desire to misrepresent the facts, but I may safely say that nine-tenths of these clerks are persons employed in the countries where the consulates are situated, because of their knowledge of the language and acquaintance with the business and modes of keeping foreign accounts. I do not believe that one-tenth of these consular clerks have been employed from this country, and I speak from personal knowledge of a great many of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is true that frequently clerks are employed abroad, but most of us know young men who have gone abroad to see foreign countries and learn the institutions of foreign countries who are thus employed.

I wish to say further that when we entered upon this debate we were gladdened by the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. ORTH] reduced the actual expenses of the consular system about $10,000; and now, before the words of the gentleman from Ohio have died away upon the air in this Hall, a proposition is brought forward to increase the appropriation more than $10,000, and he sanctions it. Why boast of an economy which the gentleman intended in the very next breath to overturn?

Mr. KASSON. I will now move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland by striking out $1,500 and inserting $1,000. That will approximate this rate to the bill of the committee. The highest rate in the bill is $1,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that that section is not yet reached. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Allow me to make a statement. I only desire that the committee shall vote intelligently on this proposition, and if they are satisfied that the increase is proper I have nothing to say. But the pay of the clerks provided for by this amendment will amount to $36,000 a year, while the pay of the clerks provided for in the bill of the committee will amount to only $13,750; in other words, it is an increase of $23,000. If it is a proper increase I have nothing to say, but I only desire that the committee shall understand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$3,000" and inserting "2,000."

The question was taken on the amendment; and, on a division, there were—ayes 10, noes 30.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to insist on a quorum on a proposition unnecessarily increasing salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will have to order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon it, with the understanding that there shall be a vote upon all these propositions in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course there will have to be a vote on them in the House if the gentleman demands it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The trouble is that the gentleman from Maryland has purposely apparently—and my colleague, I am unhappy to say, seems to be co-operating with him in this increase—so confused this arrangement as to make it difficult to apply an amendment properly; but, with the understanding that a vote will be taken in the House on this amendment, I withdraw my amendment to it.

The amendment offered by Mr. SWANN was then agreed to.

The Clerk read the third section of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President shall be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint interpreters to the consulates at Shanghai, Tien-Tsin, Fowchow, and Kanagawa, and to allow them salaries not to exceed in either case the rate of $1,000 a year; and to appoint interpreters to the consulates at Hankow, Amoy, Canton, and Hong-Kong, and to allow them salaries not to exceed in either case the rate of $750 a year; and also to allow, at his discretion, a sum not exceeding the rate of $500 for any one year to any one consulate in China or Japan, respectively, not herein named, for expenses of interpretation; and that section 6 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856, is hereby repealed.

Mr. SWANN. I move to amend that section by striking out "$1,600," and inserting in lieu thereof "$20,000."

Mr. ORTH. I desire to state the reason given by the State Department for this amendment. The Committee on Foreign Affairs in draughting this amendment placed the amount to be paid to the interpreters to the consuls at Shanghai, Tien-Tsin, Fowchow, and Kanagawa at $1,600 a year. That is not a sufficient salary to secure to our consuls and ministers there their own interpreters. The result is that we are compelled to employ interpreters attached to the French, British, and German legations, and as a matter of course are dependent upon those interpreters for a correct interpretation of the information we desire from those governments. By increasing the amount to $2,000 we will be enabled to employ our own interpreters and keep them exclusively in our own employ. The committee will see at a glance the importance of having interpreters who have no connection with legations who have interests hostile to our own in those nations. That was the reason given by the State Department, and I think it a very good one, for this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend this section by adding the following:

Provided, That all consular salaries of $3,000 a year and under as fixed in this schedule shall beinc reased 20 per cent.

I suppose it is a fearful thing for any one to propose such an amendment in this time of economy. But I believe it is a simple act of justice on the part of this Government in paying those whom it employs to perform these duties abroad. Any gentleman who knows what a consul has to do and how he has to live, and what this Government pays him for his services, will agree with me that he ought to receive 20 per cent. in addition to what he now gets, let him get it from whence he may. I believe that this Government should pay the men it employs for the services they render. Although I know that through ambition and mistaken ideas many men have a great desire to go abroad, and that if every consular salary was fixed at fifty dollars per annum, you would be burdened with applications for those positions; yet I hold that the United States has no right to accept the services of a faithful officer and give him but one-third what it costs him to live where he performs his duties. And that is the case now. You give a man $1,200 or $1,500 or $2,000 a year, and then boast in this House of the large amount of fees which he receives and turns into the Treasury. Do not let us talk this afternoon any more of economy, but let us vote for this amendment. It is a righteous thing for us to do, to give a man who serves you abroad what it costs him to buy his bread.

The amendment of Mr. RICE was not agreed to.

The Clerk read section 4 of the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of State shall, as soon as practicable, establish and determine the maximum amount of time actually necessary to make the transit between each diplomatic and consular post and the city of Washington and vice versa, and shall make the same public. He may also from time to time revise his decision in this respect; but in each case the decision is to be in like manner made public. And the allowance for time actually and necessarily occupied by each diplomatic and consular officer who may be entitled to such allowance shall in no case exceed that for the time thus established and determined, with the addition of the time usually occupied by the shortest and most direct mode of conveyance from Washington to the place of residence in the United States of such officer.

Mr. ORTH. I desire to say in support of this section, which I have no doubt the Committee of the Whole will adopt, and I make this statement for the benefit of my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN]——

Mr. HOLMAN. This is so manifestly proper that no person will object to it.

Mr. ORTH. The amount saved by this section will not be less than from $25,000 to $50,000 a year.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July next, the annual salary of consular clerks who shall have remained continuously in service as such for the period of five years and upward shall be $1,500.

Mr. MONROE. I wish to move an amendment to this section, and I would like to test the sense of the committee with regard to it. I move to add to the section the following:

And the number of consular clerks shall hereafter be fifteen.

That would add two to the number as the law now stands.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MONROE. I understand it to be quite in harmony with the whole object of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It provides for an addition to the number of consular clerks now provided for by law, and is a change of existing law.

Mr. MONROE. Is not the whole amendment of the committee a change of existing law?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The amendment of the committee was made in order by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. MONROE. Yes; but as the whole proposition is a change of existing law, my proposition is germane and in order.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The amendment which we propose does not affect the number of consular clerks at all. It relates to the question of salaries, while the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] relates to the number of consular clerks. Our amendment was made in order by a suspension of the rules on a Monday. It does not follow that the amendment to the amendment would also be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MONROE. Allow me to state the reason for my amendment. We now have thirteen consular clerks. If gentlemen will look at the places where they are stationed, they will see that they are nearly all placed in Europe. I have sometimes spoken to those connected with the State Department about placing one or two consular clerks in South America, and the reply has always been that the whole number is required in Europe, that there were at least thirteen important points outside of South America where it was desirable to station young men that they might grow up in a knowledge of our consular service and be taught the kinds of business peculiar to the ports where they are stationed.

If gentlemen will look at the list they will see that the whole South American continent is without a consular clerk. There are a large number of independent states there with which our Government for many reasons is in strong sympathy. Most important business is carried on at several of their ports. The business of the city of New York with the single port of Rio alone amounts to many millions of dollars every year. There is a kind of commerce carried on with that port, as my distinguished friend from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] will be able to tell you, quite distinct in itself, different from that which we have with European ports. It has always seemed to me of great importance that we should have at least one or two young men placed in the principal ports of South America where they could acquire a knowledge of the commerce of this country with those ports, and be able to conduct business there when they shall enter fully into the consular service. I do not see why South America should thus be cut off from all of these consular clerks. That has never seemed to me to be right. I find no fault with the State Department; but I have no question myself, from my own knowledge of the very important commerce of our country with Rio and other ports of South America, that we ought to send out there one or two young men. This is my reason for proposing the amendment adding to the number of these consular clerks. The additional expense will be very small.

Mr. KASSON. Unless the Secretary of State recommends this, I shall be obliged to vote against the amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ORTH. I move to amend section 5 by striking out $1,500 and inserting $1,250 as the salary of these consular clerks who "shall have remained continuously in service for the period of five years and upward." I will give my reasons for offering the amendment. The State Department is continually availing itself of the information and experience of these consular clerks by promoting them from that position to be consuls. So long as we provide that they shall have $1,500 salary, there may be no inducement for a consular clerk to seek advancement to the office of consul; but by making the clerical salary $1,250 there will be an inducement for the clerk to advance to the position of consul at a salary of $1,500 a year. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the following proviso shall be added to section 21 of the act aforesaid:

Provided, That any vice-consul who may be temporarily acting as consul during the absence of such consul may receive compensation, notwithstanding that he is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. KASSON. What is the meaning of the phrase "section 21 of the act aforesaid?"

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This bill when originally drawn was in the form of an amendment to the act of 1866. The phraseology to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has referred should be changed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be authorized to make a different reference, and meanwhile the Clerk can go on with the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that course will be adopted.

The Clerk read the second amendment, as follows:

In lines 102 and 103 strike out "Amoor River," "Ovalau," and "Sabanilla."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the third amendment, as follows:

In lines 105 and 106 strike out "San Domingo."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the fourth amendment, as follows:

After line 108 insert the following:

"For repaying to the government of Brazil money erroneously claimed by and paid to the United States, $57,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire some explanation of this appropriation.

Mr. SWANN. This subject has been considered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and he will make an explanation.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I might premise by observing that the less said about this the better. But I will state the object of the appropriation. In 1842 a Peruvian vessel, the Caroline, somewhat leaking, put into a port at Brazil. There being no Peruvian consul there, the captain applied to the local authorities for the appointment of a commission of survey, which decided that the vessel was incapable of repair, and ordered a sale. It was sold, and thus the vessel was lost. Undoubtedly the report as to the condition of the vessel was untrue, and the procuring of a sale was an act of barratry. The vessel was insured in New York and Philadelphia; and the insurance was paid by the companies, who at a subsequent period brought suit in the courts of Brazil against the master (who remained in that country) to have the decree of condemnation set aside as having been fraudulently obtained. Judgment was recovered against him, and the decree for condemnation and sale was set aside; but the vessel was gone, and whether anything was ever collected from the master does not appear.

A Mr. Wells, who had once been consul of the United States at the port of Saint Catherines, in Brazil, and who had been dismissed for improper practices, obtained in some manner the ownership of that claim against anybody that it might lie against. At any rate, he preferred a claim as the assignee of the rights of the insurance companies against the Brazilian government, claiming that it was responsible because, as he alleged, the judge of the court acted in collusion with those upon whose fradulent representations the vessel was sold. Mr. Wells presented his claim to our Government, and according to the ordinary practice when an American citizen makes a claim against a foreign government our minister was instructed to present the claim to the Brazilian government. It was presented I think for the first time in 1855 or 1857. The Brazilian government denied all responsibility whatever. The negotiation remained pending for some time; the claim was not very strongly urged by our Government, which did not seem to be much impressed with its merits. It was still pending when Mr. Webb was appointed our minister. He took charge of this along with other claims. His original impression, as appears in his correspondence, was against it; and during the war Mr. Seward, not wishing to have any conflict with any foreign government, instructed Mr. Webb not to press it at all upon the Brazilian government.

Subsequently, however, in the year 1867, Mr. Webb became suddenly quite interested in the claim and began to press it very actively, and taking opportunity when the Brazilian government was engaged in war, when they were in a state of great distress, he announced to the government, just as the steamer was about to leave for Europe, that he would cease his diplomatic relations, ask for his passports and send to Europe information that such were the relations of Brazil with the United States, unless that claim was paid. The Brazilian government protesting they were not liable, under these circumstances paid the money over to Mr. Webb, £14,252 sterling. Our Government, the Brazilian minister making remonstrance here, undertook to re-examine the matter; and it was submitted to the Attorney-General for an opinion, and the Attorney-General gave the opinion, which I have here in the published volume of Opinions of Attorneys-General, that there was no pretense for holding the Brazilian government responsible, even if the facts were true; that this Government had steadily refused to acknowledge itself liable to citizens of foreign nations for any misconduct of its officers, except where they were officers taking property under the authority of and for the Government; that when a foreigner came into this country and had the same access to the courts as our own citizens the Government neither, to its own citizens nor to foreigners, guaranteed the honesty, the ability, or the right judgment of its subordinate officials.

This precisely corresponds to an opinion given by Mr. Cushing to Mr. Marcy at a former period, where he discusses and elaborates the doctrine at length. I read from the head note to that opinion of Mr. Cushing:

> In its internal organization, each government has public officers, administrative, judicial, or ministerial, which officers are the agents of the community for the conduct of its public or common affairs, and of many private affairs, and are individually responsible to their country, and in many cases to individuals, for acts of political or official misbehaviour; but the government itself is not responsible to private individuals for injuries sustained by reason of the acts of such officers in the private business with which they may be officially concerned, though as public agents yet for individual benefit only. It is responsible only for such injury to individuals as may occur by acts of such officers performed in the proper behoof and business of the government.
> Thus, governments hold themselves responsible to individuals for injuries done to the latter by public officers in the collection of the revenue or other administrative acts of governmental relation but not for the errors of opinion, or corruption even, of administrative, judicial, or ministerial officers when such officers are administering their public authority in the interest of individuals as distinguished from the government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I rise to oppose the amendment, and yield my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR.]

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Thereupon the President of the United States through the Secretary of State informed the Brazilian government that this money should be repaid to them; and the purpose of this appropriation is to enable the Government to make that repayment. That is all the story I think it best to spread upon the record, if the House will so allow it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be glad to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the Government of the United States in any signal manner rebuked our minister for his conduct to the Brazilian government.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The minister in question is now in a foreign country. He has no property accessible in this country. He has been called upon repeatedly for explanation.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Has the money been paid over to the parties claiming to own the vessel?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. It has not.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Where is it?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How much was remitted to our Government?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. That is what I wish not to state. This appropriation has been approved by the entire Committee on Appropriations and the entire Committee on Foreign Affairs. In regard to the conduct of our minister, I do not think it especially to the credit of the country to state it unless my friend insists on it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not think we can be injured any more than by keeping this minister in office.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The minister is General Webb, who has been out of office a great while.

Mr. HOLMAN. Still it would be desirable to know whether the money has been paid over to the Government or to the insurance companies.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. We do not know that all of it has been paid to anybody.

Mr. ELDREDGE. This is a Government by the people and for the people, and I think the people's Representatives ought to let the people know what has been done.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. To make the story complete, Mr. Chairman, if insisted on, although I am sorry it is, I will proceed. I think it would be better for us in a matter of this kind to leave it where the committees thought it well to leave it. At the time this money was received £14,252 sterling was paid. In the dispatch of the minister informing the State Department of this payment he said he had collected the claim. He had stated previously there was a negotiation by the man who owned the claim, to sell it to some Brazilian for the sum of £5,000 sterling, but it had not been sold. When he wrote to the State Department he stated he had collected the money and remitted a draft for £5,000 sterling. The State Department did not understand and had no idea that that £5,000 was not the whole amount paid. They notified him immediately that the money would not be paid over to the parties, under the protest of the Brazilian minister, until an investigation had been had.

That investigation and what ensued about it took up a long time, until at last, when the opinion of the Attorney-General was received, the President directed the Brazilian government to be informed that the money should be repaid; that the £5,000 sterling had been invested in United States securities, which, with the interest, would be repaid. The Brazilian minister then said he understood that his government had paid a good deal more than £5,000. The Secretary of State replied he was not aware of it, but supposed that was the sum received, and wished for evidence upon that point. Thereupon the Brazilian minister brought the papers forwarded to him by his government, by which it appeared that £14,250 had been paid. Some little delay occurred to have this verified, when they brought our minister's receipt to the Brazilian government on behalf of his Government for £14,250 sterling. That made explanations very desirable, and our minister was written to to make them. He returned only indignant and very voluminous letters, speaking about expenses in procuring the assistance of Brazilian officials to get the claim passed, which was not a species of disbursement that this Government had ever sanctioned or authorized, or that would be becoming a government in prosecuting a claim—to corrupt Brazilians to betray the interest of their own country in order to collect the claim of one of our citizens. And there his explanation ended. He gave no particulars. He would not state to whom it was paid or how it was paid, or anything on that subject whatever; and all claims upon him failed to elicit anything of the kind.

The attempt was then made to find out from the Brazilian government what became of the money; and it was found that it was paid by the Brazilian government in three drafts upon London, copies of which I have in the somewhat voluminous papers before me. One of those drafts was transmitted simply with the indorsement of our minister directly to the United States for £5,000 sterling, and that was the sum received. Another draft for £3,352 contained several indorsements in Brazil, by which it appeared to have been discounted there, and probably the proceeds were retained and expended there. There was nothing to show to whom paid, because the whole draft was paid together finally in London. But banks in Brazil had advanced the money, so that it was there for distribution. The other draft for £5,900 was paid into the private account in London of our minister to Brazil. As to what became of that £5,900, there is no trace to be found and there is nothing known.

Such is the mortifying position of this matter. This Government has found that, in a period of extremity, its minister had obtained from the Brazilian government a payment, which is found, on examination, to have been exacted in violation of the rule which this Government itself had claimed in regard to other governments, and which the legal advisers of the Government have given their opinion is applicable to this case. And thereupon the Executive has promised the government of Brazil that the money, with interest, shall be returned. Five thousand pounds, with interest, is on hand for the purpose, and this amendment asks an appropriation to repay the remainder. It is clearly, as it would seem, required by national good faith and national honor; and we must settle with our own ministers and officers, such as we have, at our leisure the best way we can.

Mr. POTTER. This morning I moved to strike out an appropriation for a minister provided for under this bill to two countries in South America, our entire commercial relations with which were confined to one port, for which the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in his amendment to this bill has provided a consulate of the fifth class only. I said then that it was not worth while to pay a salary, with one exception as large as that paid to any minister in South America, to the smallest country there with which we had diplomatic relations and where the minister there accredited during the last few years had, so far as I could learn, nothing to do most of the time. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs defended the appropriation. The fact that the country was small, that there was no necessity for a minister going there, and that he drew one of the largest salaries of any minister accredited to South America, did not seem to afford to his mind any reason for not continuing that mission and the appropriation for it made heretofore. Perhaps the gentleman was right, but not for a reason about which he will agree with me.

I believe myself these foreign missions are generally useless, and a mere waste of money. The amendment that has just been discussed indicates that this one was; for I infer from the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts that it would be alike to the pecuniary interest and the credit of this country if in this case our minister had staid away from South America, had drawn his salary and staid at home.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman answer me whether a minister sent to a foreign government can leave his station without consent of the Secretary of State?

Mr. POTTER. I do not know whether he can or cannot.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I say he cannot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Survey of boundary between the United States and British possessions: For expenses of the commission appointed under act approved March 19, 1872, for the purpose of surveying and marking the boundary between the territory of the United States and the possessions of Great Britain from the Lake of the Woods to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, to be available immediately on the passage of this act, $150,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reduce the amount to $102,000. I do so for the purpose of drawing the attention of the committee to the legislation on this subject.

The original estimate, which I hold in my hand, required an appropriation of $102,000 a year, anticipating an entire expenditure of $325,000 for the running of this line on the part of our Government. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] the day before yesterday had read to the committee a statement from the Secretary of State in which it is said that the original estimate for the expense of running this line on the forty-ninth parallel from Lake of the Woods to the Rocky Mountains was $375,000. The Secretary of State is incorrect in that, for I hold the estimate, as I have said, in my hand.

Now, when this proposition came before the House two years ago we determined that this work should be performed by our own engineers. The estimates made were for the employment of all the persons necessary to make the survey, engineers, astronomers, &c. We struck out the part of the bill that contemplated the employment of those persons, and required that the work should be done by our engineers. I ask the Clerk to read that bill so that the House may be informed what were its provisions. I can see very well that this is one of the elephants we have on our hands that is not likely to be got rid of very cheaply. Last year the Secretary of State asked $150,000, but the House struck that out and appropriated $50,000 to complete the work. It was taken for granted that the work of running a line eight hundred miles in length with the aid of astronomers and engineers could be done in a single season.

The Clerk read as follows:

That $50,000, or so much thereof as may be required, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the objects of said joint commission.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the last section of the bill. I ask the Clerk now to read the first section requiring the work to be done by our own engineers.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and he is hereby, authorized to co-operate with the government of Great Britain in the appointment of a joint commission in accordance with the plans and estimates of Brigadier-General A. A. Humphreys, Chief of Engineers, submitted November 23, 1870, for determining the boundary line between the United States and the British possessions, between the Lake of the Woods and the Rocky Mountains: Provided, however, That engineers in the regular service of the United States shall be employed exclusively as engineers in the performance of the duties contemplated by this act without any additional salaries; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to make the necessary detail of engineers for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee will observe that we required that the work should be done exclusively by our own engineers. Instead of that a commissioner has been appointed at a salary of $4,000 a year. We appropriated at that time $50,000, and the last year we appropriated $125,000 more; and now for this year we are asked to appropriate $150,000 more. Now, $350,000 is more than the whole sum asked for the work when it was to be done by persons whose salaries were estimated for by General Humphreys, and not by our own engineers.

Now, sir, I hold that this appropriation is unwarrantable, and that the work should have been done in half the time. We are making it far more expensive to us than the British government is making it. Their engineers only are employed, and their chief engineer or astronomer is also the commissioner, while we are detailing only one or two engineers, including Captain Twining, and paying large salaries to other persons in defiance of the law, which required that the work should be done by our own engineers without additional salaries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment; and there were—ayes 14, noes 40; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to insist on a quorum. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations this question: If $50,000 were sufficient for the year before last, and $125,000 for last year, are we to be told that $150,000 must be appropriated for this year?

Mr. GARFIELD. I supposed that the gentleman from Indiana had been entirely silenced in his objection to this portion of the bill in the debate that we had the other day, which was so full and exhaustive, and by the documents published in the speech of my distinguished colleague in the committee [Mr. SWANN] who explained the whole matter. The survey of this line has been completed for eight hundred miles, and the balance of the work can be done this season, provided a sufficient sum to make a complete survey is here appropriated and is made payable now on the passage of this bill rather than in July, when they would have to start out late in the season and return during the frost and go on again with the work in the late spring next year. To require them to do this would be simply a waste of money.

To appropriate enough to do the whole work and finish it now and let the amount be available from the passage of this act, would be more economical by far than to drizzle it along from year to year. The letter of the Secretary of State shows that the sum here asked for, with all that has been heretofore appropriated, will be less than the original estimate by General Humphreys.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that that statement is not correct? I have in my hand the estimate made and sent to the House a few years ago.

Mr. GARFIELD. I leave that quarrel to be settled between the gentleman and the Secretary of State.

Mr. HOLMAN. The estimate was for $100,000 a year.

Mr. GARFIELD. For how many years?

Mr. HOLMAN. For three years.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much will that make?

Mr. HOLMAN. He put the aggregate sum at $300,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much have we already appropriated?

Mr. HOLMAN. We appropriated the first year $50,000, the next year $125,000, and now it is proposed to appropriate $150,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is for the field-work alone.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman himself does not claim that we have exceeded the original estimate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the appropriation now asked for make it fully up to the limit? We refused to appropriate $100,000 the first year and put it at $50,000, because we required our own engineers to do the work.

Mr. GARFIELD. Because the House of Representatives, in order to avoid the perpetual scolding of the gentleman from Indiana on this question, consented to make a little appropriation that could be used only until the frost came, and which only began to be used after the commencement of the fiscal year, when they must quit before the year really closed because the appropriation would run out. If it should happen that that bad economy made it impossible to get get along with the original estimate, I think the fault is here. The estimates of the engineer in charge of the work and the recommendation of the Secretary of State are that $150,000 given now, to be made available on the passage of this act, will complete the survey. The Committee on Appropriations think it wiser to do that. The gentleman from Indiana proposes to cut it down $50,000. You can do that, but you will run the whole survey over into another year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the $125,000 appropriated last year last through the season?

Mr. GARFIELD. On the contrary, we are told that if we had given more they could have gone on with the work.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say——

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the gentleman have leave to reprint all that he has heretofore said on this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make the prediction that next year we will have estimates for a further appropriation for this work, and that the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] with his usual consistency, will be found sustaining it on this floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. That may be; I cannot say it will not be.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that this bill be now laid aside, to be reported with the amendments to the House, in order that the Committee of the Whole may proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that. Let us pass this bill and be done with it.

Mr. GARFIELD. We can do that when the committee rises.

Mr. TYNER. Let us see if the Committee of the Whole is not disposed to work another hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I shall be compelled to call for the reading of the bill in full.

Mr. TYNER. I hope not.

The motion of Mr. GARFIELD was then agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole then proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. TYNER. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of this bill be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object; let the bill be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the bill; but before concluding,

Mr. HOLMAN said: It is now getting late, and I hope the committee will consent to rise.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will withdraw his objection to dispensing with the first reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the understanding that two hours will be allowed for general debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a matter to be determined in the House.

Mr. TYNER. For myself, I do not wish to occupy a single moment in general debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are others who do.

Mr. MERRIAM. It is raining so hard outside that we could not go home if we did adjourn now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the reading of the bill go on.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, and then proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment. The following was read:

For pay of route-agents, $929,035.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of this bill by paragraphs for amendment after the length of time the House has been in session to-day I think is rather an unusual proceeding. Several gentlemen desire to be heard upon this bill, and I hope there will be no objection to the Committee of the Whole now rising.

Mr. TYNER. My colleague has perhaps failed to notice the fact that the first reading of the bill has been finished, the second reading has been commenced, and two or three clauses have been read.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. TYNER. I hope not; we can get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. GARFIELD. It would crown the labors of the week if we could get this bill through this evening.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, there were—ayes 32, noes 38; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Mr. TYNER. If my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] calls for tellers, the committee may as well rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. Several gentlemen who desire to discuss this bill are not now present, as they did not suppose it would come up for consideration this afternoon.

Mr. TYNER. If my colleague will waive the demand for tellers I will renew the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. TYNER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURROWS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and the bill (H. R. No. 3094) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; that the committee had come to no resolution on the latter, and had directed the former to be reported back with sundry amendments.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the previous question on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask a separate vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SWANN] increasing certain salaries.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to raise a point of order. As I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland referred to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was an amendment to another amendment which was offered to the bill by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. ORTH.] I raise the question whether the House can go back of the latter amendment as now reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing of what took place in Committee of the Whole; but a separate vote cannot be had except on an amendment reported to the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] was amended in two or three places before it was adopted; but it was finally adopted in lieu of a large portion of our bill which was struck out.

The SPEAKER. Those amendments which the Committee of the Whole may have adopted in the process of perfecting an amendment neither the House nor the Chair knows anything about.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose there is but one amendment reported, and that now lies before the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question can only be taken in the House upon the amendments as reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the Chair to say that we cannot call for a division of a proposition which comes before the House in the form of an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds in his hand the amendment to which the gentleman refers; it is an amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Now, if it happened in Committee of the Whole that this amendment was in various respects amended before being finally adopted, the House knows nothing of that matter. The question is, Will the House agree to this amendment as reported from the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the Chair hold that this whole amendment is to be regarded as presenting but one question?

The SPEAKER. That depends altogether upon whether it was moved as one.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was moved as four amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will of course see the absolute impossibility of the House taking up the various votes by which that amendment may have been perfected. When it comes to the House the question is on agreeing to the amendment. There may have been a hundred votes in Committee of the Whole in the process of perfecting it; but the House does not take cognizance of them.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Indiana will see that the first amendment extends to the sixth section.

Mr. HOLMAN. But still the clerks, I suppose, will inform the Chair that in fact the proposition down to the end of the classification of consuls was submitted as one amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the first amendment submitted by the Committee on Foreign Affairs through its chairman [Mr. ORTH] embraced from page 1 to page 15 of the printed document down to the words "not a citizen of the United States."

Mr. ORTH. That was one amendment.

The SPEAKER. Now the process (whatever it may have been) of perfecting that amendment in Committee of the Whole is not reported to the House.

Mr. ORTH. Let me state to the House my recollection of how this was done. The gentleman from Maryland moved to strike out the second section of the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and to insert a substitute. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moved to amend the second section. Then the Committee of the Whole adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, striking out the entire second section, and of course the amendment offered by my colleague fell.

The SPEAKER. Whatever may have been the matter of detail, the rule as it has been stated by the Chair is absolute, and any different rule would lead to inextricable confusion. The process by which an amendment in Committee of the Whole is perfected is not reported to the House; if it were, the whole advantage of going into Committee of the Whole would be lost.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask my colleague [Mr. ORTH] whether he did not submit the first section of this bill as an amendment, moving to strike out a certain portion of the pending bill and insert his proposition instead?

Mr. ORTH. O, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands a separate vote on the first amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition by the Chair of course does not embrace the proposition I wish especially to put to the House. My desire is to demand a separate vote on the second section of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe the way the rule works in that regard. If that motion should be submitted and the yeas and nays should be asked, there would be no advantage in going into Committee of the Whole, as the yeas and nays could be called in the House on every separate motion. If the House is like-minded with the gentleman from Indiana and desires a separate vote on that, it can be reached by refusing to second the demand for the previous question, and then the bill will be open to amendment and that second section may be stricken out. It still leaves it as the rules always do, under complete control of a majority of the House. If the gentleman desires a test, he can have it on seconding the demand for the previous question. The previous question was seconded pro forma, and if the gentleman desires a test with the view of submitting a separate vote, the Chair will again put the question on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. We should have a separate vote on striking out the second section. I do not think the Committee of the Whole were fully apprised of what was the effect of their action.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do demand a test vote on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appointed Mr. SWANN and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 18, no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House seems so determined to increase these salaries, that I will abandon any further opposition and do not ask for a further count.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments of the Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SWANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The later motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1271) for the relief of John T. Watson, of Cincinnati, Ohio;

An act (H. R. No. 2074) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a military prison and for its government," approved March 3, 1873;

An act (H. R. No. 2100) for the relief of Martin Hoff, Casper Doerr, and George Gebhart, citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri;

An act (H. R. No. 2205) for the relief of P. Hornbrook;

An act (H. R. No. 2348) for the relief of Rev. George Morrison, late of Kentucky; and

An act (H. R. No. 2346) for the relief of W. A. Sayler, of Bryan, Texas.

MOIETIES.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 3171) to amend the customs-revenue laws and to repeal moieties. The Committee on Ways and Means desire to make two or three amendments to the bill which do not change its character, and I ask that the bill be reprinted with the amendments embodied in it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the bill be printed as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. RANDALL. That was improperly done the other day on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. The expense of reprinting an important bill like this is as nothing.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I am willing to have them so printed. Otherwise the committee recommend these amendments be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. The best way is to move to recommit the bill with the amendments, and have it ordered to be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman only proposes to submit the amendments to be offered when before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. How are you going to have them printed in the bill as a part of it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not ask that.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio did.

Mr. GARFIELD. I asked the bill be reprinted as was done in the case of one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. That was an unusual motion which the gentleman made. I never heard it made before.

Mr. POLAND. Ordering these amendments to be printed in the RECORD will be of no service, for no one can tell what connection they have with the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House and the gentleman from New York asks that the amendments be printed.

The amendments were ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I have not yielded the floor. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

FREE BANKING.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move, by unanimous consent, that the bill (H. R. No. 1512) to amend the several acts providing for a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, as returned from the Senate, be reprinted.

The motion was agreed to.

INSANE CONVICTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] is on the floor. He will state to whom he yields, if to any.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I yield to my colleague, [Mr. TREMAIN.]

Mr. TREMAIN. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask consent of the House to report, and have put upon its passage, a bill to provide for the care and custody of persons convicted in the courts of the United States who have or may become insane while in prison. There is now no law concerning this class of insane convicts. The bill is very brief, and I ask that it may now be put upon its passage.

Mr. COBURN. I object.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. LUTTRELL: A communication from the board of State harbor commissioners of California, in relation to remodeling the plan of the harbor of San Francisco, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Alfred H. Love and 1,000 other citizens of Pennsylvania and other States, that immediate measures be taken by Congress to second the movement inaugurated by the Parliament of Great Britain and promulgated by the Queen for conferring with the various governments of the world on the subject of international arbitration, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SENER: The petition of the Shiloh Baptist church, of Fredericksburgh, Virginia, to be compensated for damages inflicted on their church building by United States troops in 1862, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 18, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was dispensed with.

CORRECTION—THE CURRENCY BILL.

Mr. BOREMAN. I wish to make a correction in what appears in the RECORD of Friday last containing the proceedings of Thursday. While the vote was pending upon the passage of the currency bill, it appears that the Senator from Texas [Mr. HAMILTON] made this statement:

> Upon this question the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BOREMAN] is paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY.] The Senator from West Virginia would vote "yea," and Mr. SAULSBURY "nay."

That is a mistake. The Senator from Delaware and myself were paired upon the vote on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] He would have voted for that amendment and I should have voted against it. That was the extent of our pair. I should not have voted for the passage of the bill; on the contrary, I should have voted against it; and at the time I made the arrangement with my friend from Delaware, I made the statement to him that I thought I could not vote for the bill. I merely wished to correct this mistake which appears on the face of the RECORD.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that the Senator is perfectly correct. He was simply paired with me on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] On the currency bill itself the Senator from West Virginia stated to me that he would vote as I did, against it. The announcement of our pair was made by the Senator from Texas, who did not understand the case precisely.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PRATT presented a memorial of merchants and manufacturers of Evansville, Indiana, remonstrating against the abolishment of the office of appraiser at that port; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM presented the petition of William Gardner, John Davids, and 42 others, of the Mohoconuck, now Stockbridge tribe of Indians, praying Congress to adopt such measures as will protect them in their rights under certain treaties, remunerate them for damages incurred by them, and secure to them what is justly their own; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition, numerously signed by citizens of Chicago, Illinois, praying the passage of a law directing the Secretary of the Treasury to have all Government issues, notes, bonds, &c., printed at one establishment so as to prevent the counterfeiting of the same; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of William Glenn & Sons and others, citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, and the petition of R. M. Bishop & Co. and others, citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying the passage of a law defining a gross of matches and to provide for uniform packages; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT. I have in my hand a letter from the Director of the Mint on free coinage, a subject which is now pending before the Senate upon a bill which is on the Calendar. I move that it be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of a committee of the Baltimore branch of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, praying an amendment to the charter of the company so as to allow that branch a board of trustees with authority to control the investment of its deposits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. THURMAN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the officers of the Masonic Lodge of Georgetown, South Carolina, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 742) for the relief of Henry A. Webster, V. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, of Washington Territory, pre-emptors on the Makah Indian reservation, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 825) to amend an act entitled "An act to confirm to the Great and Little Osage Indians a reservation in the Indian Territory," approved June 5, 1872; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. Mr. WRIGHT. On the 12th instant there was reported from the Committee on Finance a bill (S. No. 653) for the relief of E. Boyd Pendleton, late collector of internal revenue fifth district of Virginia, and its indefinite postponement was recommended; and on the next day that motion was reconsidered and the bill went on the Calendar. I now move that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it lie on the table for the present:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on the 22d day of June, A. D. 1874, at twelve o'clock noon.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

CIVIL-SERVICE RULES.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to the Senate the answer in full received by the civil service commission in reply to their circular addressed to the various heads of Departments and Bureaus requesting a report as to the operation and effect of the civil-service rules in their several Departments and offices.

Mr. RAMSEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate any information he may have acquired since his last annual report, in regard to the preservation of the Falls of Saint Anthony and the navigation above the same, together with such suggestions relative thereto as he may deem proper.

A bill (H. R. No. 2348) for the relief of Rev. George Morrison, late of Kentucky; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2346) for the relief of W. A. Saylor, of Bryan, Texas.

BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 763) explaining the intent and meaning of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act in addition to certain acts granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1855, and reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read. It provides that the rights and privileges of soldiers, their widows and heirs at law, to any certificate or warrant referred to in said section 4, that may issue or that has heretofore been issued, under the provisions of that act, or of any other act, shall be governed by the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850, so far as to prevent the sale of any such certificate or warrant, or the land obtained thereby, on account of any debt or claim incurred by such officer or soldier prior to the issuing of the patent.

An amendment was reported by the Committee on Public Lands, in line 11, after the word "sale," to insert the words "on execution, or by virtue of any judicial order."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I make no objection; but I wish to make two remarks to my friend from Indiana. In the first place, I do not understand, and I apprehend the Senate will not understand without a word of explanation from him, what the object of this bill is; but in the second place, and more particularly, here is another instance of referring to an act so and so and amending it. I beg to remind the Senate again that in a few days, when we act, as I hope we shall act, on the revision of the laws, a large part of all this identity is to be obliterated. I suggest to the Senator whether he would not rather say affirmatively what he means this bill to do than to refer to lines and acts and pages in statute-books which very soon will be practically obsolete.

Mr. PRATT. This bill may possibly be obnoxious to the objection urged by the Senator from New Jersey; but there is pressing necessity for its passage. The act of September 28, 1850, in the fourth section provided as follows in relation to these bounty-land warrants: "nor shall such certificate or warrant, or the land obtained thereby, be in anywise affected by, or charged with, or subject to, the payment of any debt or claim incurred by such officer or soldier prior to the issuing of the patent." This section was omitted in the act of March 3, 1855, and the consequence has been that in several of the States the lands granted to soldiers under the act of 1855 as bounties have been subjected by the order of the courts to the payment of the debts incurred prior to the issuing of the patent. The object of this bill is simply to carry into the act of 1855 the provision which I have quoted from the act of 1850. I have a letter here from the Commissioner of the General Land Office which I will send to the Clerk's desk and request that it be read, which explains the necessity of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 14, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday, inclosing Senate bill No. 763, explaining the intent and meaning of the fourth section of the act entitled "An act in addition to certain acts granting bounty lands to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1855, requesting my opinion as to the necessity of such an amendment. You also inquire whether we know if in any of the States courts have held under the act of 1855 that soldiers' bounty-land warrants are subject to be sold for the debt of such soldiers, &c.

In reply I have to state that it has come to the knowledge of this office in numerous cases that State courts have ordered the sale of soldiers' warrants for the payment of debts previously incurred, and frequently are made assets of the estates of such soldiers; but under what law such order was made this office is not advised; perhaps under the respective State laws; but in no such case has this office approved of such sale.

Nevertheless, as in the act of 1855, such prohibitions are not clearly expressed, I am of the opinion that it would be more clearly understood by all concerned if the bill you inclose be amended as suggested in your letter, by inserting in the eleventh line, after the word "sale," the words "on execution or by virtue of any judicial order."

The bill inclosed by you is herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. W. CURTIS,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. D. D. PRATT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PRATT. The bill as amended is in the language of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and if it shall become a law will protect these bounty-land warrants from being subjected to sale for the purpose of the payment of the debts of the soldier. I do not suppose that any objection will be urged by any gentleman to the passage of this bill unless it be the technical one urged by my friend from New York, and really I do not see that that is very important in the case of a small bill like this.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Indiana is right in his conjecture that I have no objection to the object of the bill or to the bill itself in substance; but I submit to him that this is a very simple and very glaring case of the need of changing our form of legislating. I beg the Senate to observe that the whole purpose of the Senator from Indiana is to provide that bounty-land warrants and certificates issued to soldiers shall be exempt from levy and sale on execution. That is the whole of it. Why not say so? How does the bill say so? It starts off with a title, which title occupies five lines, being "A bill explaining the intent and meaning of the fourth section of the act entitled 'An act in addition to certain acts granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,' approved March 3, 1855." Now what does the bill say? Does it say that these warrants and certificates shall be exempt from levy and sale on execution? Yes, sir; it says it but not in those words, but says it covered up by a reference to two statutes neither of which will be found by its title or found where it is referred to here, as soon as we shall have acted on the revision of the laws. Let me see if I am right in that:

That the rights and privileges of soldiers, their widows and heirs at law, to any certificate or warrant referred to in said section 4—that may issue or that has heretofore been issued, under the provisions of said act, or of any other act, shall be governed by the provisions of section 4 of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850, so far as to prevent the sale on execution or by virtue of any judicial order of any such certificate or warrant, or the land obtained thereby, on account of any debt or claim incurred by such officer or soldier prior to the issuing of the patent.

That refers back to the title of the bill—

Boil that down; and what is it in plain English? It is that hereafter all such certificates and warrants, and the land held thereunder shall be exempt from levy and sale on execution for any debt incurred prior to the issue of such certificate; and that is the whole thing, and there it speaks for itself. Every lawyer can read it and every layman can read it. It can be put in one-quarter of the words employed here, and be entitled "An act exempting certificates and warrants from sale," and there is the whole story in a nut-shell. I am not going to struggle with my friend. He just heard the Clerk of the House of Representatives read the title of an act to consolidate the statutes of the District of Columbia. The committee of this body having charge of that subject have been waiting for that bill, which was the little complement needed to make up the entirety of the revision of the statutes. The committee hope to report it very soon, and they hope for the favorable action of the Senate at once, and then my honorable friend will have upon the statute-book, if in the mean time this act shall be passed, a statute referring to volumes which hereafter will be disused unless our revision is to be a failure, and superseded by the volume of revision in which volume a man may look—I will not say in vain, for of course he will be able to find it, but will look under great difficulties to find the meaning of an act which contains three times as many words as are neccessary to state flat-footed and distinctly what it means; namely, that these warrants and certificates and the land acquired under them are hereafter to be exempt from levy and sale on execution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And the act itself which is referred to will be repealed.

Mr. CONKLING. And the Chair reminds me of a most important thing, which I ought to have stated, that the act referred to will itself be repealed because it is a necessary part, as the Senate will see, of the scheme of revision to re-enact all these laws as they shall stand condensed and collected together, and to repeal all existing statutes.

Now I hope that my friend from Indiana, if he has no objection, of his own accord will consent to take this bill back and rewrite it. He says it is a small bill. It will be much less labor than is involved in most of these instances, and let him set the rest of us the example of making our legislation as we shall be obliged to make it hereafter unless we intend all the time to row against the current of the revision of the statutes. Of course, it is of no more consequence to me than it is to others. The Senate will act as it deems proper.

Mr. PRATT. There is wisdom in the suggestion of the Senator from New York; but it must be remembered that we had a resolution presented this morning to provide for an adjournment on the 22d of June, and if this bill is to be sent back to the Committee on Public Lands, which meets at half-past ten o'clock when the Senate meets at eleven, it amounts practically to a defeat of the bill; because, in the multitudinous mass of matters coming before that committee, it is scarcely to be hoped that the bill will receive another consideration, and if it should be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from New York and reported back, it would have to be acted upon by the Senate and then sent to the House. I hope the bill will pass in its present form.

Mr. CONKLING. I was in the act of drawing an amendment which I thought the Senator would accept, and I think I might say I could prepare in five minutes a substitute for this bill avoiding the criticism. The Senator could do it in much less time. In order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Public Lands for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator will withdraw his motion and let the bill pass over until to-morrow morning, I will prepare an amendment in accordance with his suggestion.

Mr. CONKLING. I will do that, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to take up the bill is withdrawn.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 675) to relieve ships and vessels from compulsory pilot fees in certain cases. I think it will occupy very little time.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Commerce proposed to amend the first section of the bill by striking out in line 4 the words "duly registered or enrolled" and inserting "when trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery;" so as to read:

That no owner, agent, master, or consignee of any ship or vessel, when trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery, shall, by virtue of the laws of any State, be compelled to take, employ, or pay a pilot not voluntarily employed on entering or departing from any port or harbor, or entering, passing through, or leaving any channel, passage, or strait within the waters of the United States.

Mr. HAMLIN. It will be observed that the second section of the bill is stricken out by the report of the committee. This bill as originally introduced by myself provided in the first section for the abolition of all compulsory pilot fees whatever. The second section provided that the owner, master, or agent of a vessel should not be compelled to pay compulsory fees when his vessel was taken into or out of port by a tug-boat. That section was added upon the idea that the tow-boat might charge an additional sum equivalent to pilotage. The committee, however, after considering it, believed the terms of the first section broad enough to cover the whole matter and have recommended the striking out of the second section, to which I do not object. They further recommend in the first section to strike out the words "duly registered or enrolled" and insert "when trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery." The adoption of that amendment will make the bill effective only upon what is popularly known as the coasting trade and coasting-vessels, with one slight addition, that if a vessel under register should enter a port other than that at which she was registered, she could take homeward coast freight and thus go from port to port, from the place where she entered, to her home port as a coasting-vessel. It is practically, therefore, abolishing compulsory pilotage upon the coasting trade.

I have myself no doubt whatever that the provisions of the first section are precisely what the best interests of commerce, the best interests of underwriters, and the best interests of all the world demand. I have given much time to an investigation of this subject, and am prepared to discuss it at length. The Committee on Commerce, however, having unanimously reported the bill in its present form, I presume it will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate; and being more desirous of securing the passage of the bill than of consuming the time of the Senate in speaking, I forbear.

Inasmuch as this report has come back to us with the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Commerce, I do not propose to vary their amendment or to change it except by inserting the word "collection" before "district" in the fifth line. I think that becomes necessary. What "district" is referred to? Is it a congressional district, is it a light-house district, or is it a district of some other kind? I have not turned my eye to that statute for some time, but I think if Senators will turn back to the navigation law of 1789, they will find there is incorporated in that law a provision for what are called "the great districts" and then comes a subdivision of those. If there be nothing in relation to the suggestion as to congressional districts or light-house districts, a question may arise as the language now stands whether its application would be only between what are called the great districts and the small districts.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] tells me that that precise phraseology occurs in twenty different statutes. I know it; but if the Senator will look at those statutes he will see that in each of them there is a collection district referred to, and therefore you do not want the distinctive character of the district named because it is in the text of each of those bills and is not in the text of this. It can do no harm to make this clear; it will meet with no objection, I am very sure; and I therefore move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "collection" before the word "district" in the fifth line.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I cannot believe that that amendment is necessary. I think it is a superfluous proposition. In the statute of 1793, from which the language used in the amendment of the committee is borrowed exactly as found in the sixth section, previous to it the phrase "collection district" is not used as far as I can find. I think I see an objection to the Senator's proposition. As it stands now "between district and district," the language would apply to what are called the great districts as well as the collection districts. For instance, we have a great district, as it is called, extending from the eastern coast of Maine to Florida, which is district No. 1. We have a district extending from the western coast of Florida to the Sabine River—it never has been changed since the act admitting Texas—which is district No. 2; and when Florida was acquired that was made into a district called district No. 3. I think that leaving the language reported by the committee will save the Department from the necessity of considering whether it is a great district or a collection district; and inasmuch as the subject-matter of the bill is trade on the coast, it cannot refer to any other districts than those districts which are framed for the purpose of facilitating the administration of the navigation and revenue laws. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Maine will withdraw his amendment. I think it is superfluous.

Mr. HAMLIN. I must frankly admit that I think the text of this bill defines the use of the word "district" satisfactorily; but subsequently to the report of this bill I received so many letters from merchants and ship-owners who are frightened, rather than myself, suggesting that the word "collection" ought to precede the word "district," that I made the motion. However, taking the whole text, I am willing to trust it, and will withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if an illustration were needed of the fact that the Senator from Maine never puts his hand to the plow and turns back, the bill before us would be a complete illustration of that fact. The Senator, convinced profoundly that the interests of navigators and especially the interests of his constituents require a change in the pilot laws, has been so persistent and has been so argumentative and so able in his mode of presenting the subject to the committee and insisting upon it and pressing it forward at all times, that, in part as I think because the committee was not able to resist him, this bill has been reported.

I do not rise to make any attack upon it or to consume any time in objecting to it. I wish, however, to say that as it was introduced originally, speaking now of the port of New York, its effect would have been to cut up altogether the existing system of pilotage. Upon consideration, the committee changed it so far as not to make it applicable to foreign vessels or sea-going vessels, and to confine it to the particular field of operation which the Senator from Maine has been so strenuous in insisting upon. As it stands now, it does interfere with the pilotage known as Hell Gate pilotage as contradistinguished from Sandy Hook pilotage, and it permits vessels plying in the coasting trade without taking a pilot to run in and out of those local waters. I say for myself that in the presence of the very urgent effort which has been made I consented to this, in the hope that it was right, and knowing that it was much less radical than the original measure. I take it, it will be the pleasure of the Senate to adopt it; and I shall consider it, if I may be forgiven for saying so, about as much a personal triumph of my honorable friend from Maine as it is an act of legislation in the interest of commerce in the abstract.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. After the enactment of this bill, will coasting vessels be required to have pilots?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir. The very purpose of it is to release coasting vessels from the necessity of taking a pilot, and if my friend will pardon me for one moment, it will of course occur to him that the reason and excuse for that is the supposition that men engaged in the coasting trade run in and out of the harbors so often, that they are able without the exposure of life or property to manage their vessels substantially as well as the trained pilots would do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can trained pilots get their subsistence if the range of their business is to be diminished in this way? Will not that drive them out of the business?

Mr. CONKLING. That is a very natural question; and the answer to it is that the bill still leaves compulsory pilotage applicable to foreign vessels and sea-going vessels. Exempting coasting vessels, it applies to but few vessels running into the port of New York, except those going through Long Island Sound and Hell Gate or the East River; and it is thought that, in spite of the effect to which the Senator from Vermont alludes, it is warrantable in the way that I have explained.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask the Senator from New York what is the exact meaning of the phrase "trading between district and district?"

Mr. CONKLING. As has been explained by the Senator from Maine in advocating the amendment, vessels running from one collection district to another collection district as distinguished from vessels running from Aspinwall to New York, or from Cuba to New York, or from the other hemisphere to New York.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I confess that I hope this bill will not become a law. I think there are two serious objections to it, one of which was suggested by the Senator from Vermont. How will you keep up and support a system of pilotage if you take from the pilots all the receipts and income which they now derive from the coasting trade of the country? It cannot be kept up, and the consequence will be that while you are dispensing with pilotage as to coasting-vessels, you will dispense with pilotage as to foreign and sea-going vessels. Besides that, I do not believe it to be a fact that these vessels engaged in the coasting trade are so manned and officered that they are competent safely to bring their vessels into harbor at all times. These pilots in New York and in New Jersey are practiced, experienced men, men of great energy, great skill and courage, and they ought to be protected so that they may be maintained for the welfare not only of the coasting vessels, but of all sea-going vessels.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I hope this bill will become a law. There are to-day forty-two pilots for Hell Gate. Hell Gate was formerly a dangerous passage; but the Government has expended some millions of dollars improving Hell Gate, and now they compel every vessel passing through Hell Gate, whether it uses a pilot or not, to pay half-pilotage to support these forty-two men. If they had three or four pilots for Hell Gate, it is possible that occasionally a very deep ship might want to engage a pilot; but certainly two or three would be sufficient; and yet they levy a forced contribution upon the commerce passing through Hell Gate, upon which this Government has expended millions of dollars, to support forty-two men, of over $250,000.

These coasting-vessels are regular traders and their commanders are better pilots than any pilots that go through Hell Gate. It is the same on all our coasting routes. A ship makes a trip once a week, or perhaps once a fortnight, and the captains of these ships have been in this traffic from their youth up, and there is no more reason why those captains should be compelled to pay half-pilotage than there is why they should be compelled to put a nineteenth man on their ship when eighteen are enough.

But, sir, compulsory pilotage still holds upon all our foreign commerce. Any ship touching at a foreign port is compelled to pay pilotage whether she takes a pilot or not. If New Jersey has more pilots than the legitimate business of pilotage will support, tell them to go to sailing-coasters or some other business where they can earn a legitimate living.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to say a word or two in relation to this matter, and but a word or two. First, I wish to state to the Senate, what is the fact, that there is no compulsory pilotage upon the coasting-vessels to-day coming in by the way of Sandy Hook, and there has not been. New York has repealed her laws enforcing compulsory pilotage on all coasting-vessels that come in by the way of Sandy Hook. This bill then will have the effect only to abolish what is called half-pilotage by the way of Hell Gate; that is all there is of it.

Now does my friend from New Jersey know, and does the Senator from Vermont know, that of the skilled pilots who go down to help the vessels through Hell Gate not one in twenty touches a vessel?

The vessels do not want them; they do not need them. And do the Senators know that these pilots go down there in yawl-boats and nothing else? I think I am accurate in saying that that whole board of pilots have got but a single pilot-boat. I am so informed by the pilots of New York. A pilot by the way of Hell Gate communicated that fact to me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean one pilot-boat for that district?

Mr. HAMLIN. One pilot-boat goes out to meet and pilot vessels.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out to sea?

Mr. HAMLIN. I mean just what I say, that the Hell Gate pilot board has got but one pilot-boat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be.

Mr. HAMLIN. The rest of them all perform the arduous and hazardous task of going down that channel in a yawl-boat, notifying the master of a vessel that he, the pilot, wants his half-pilotage, and the master pays it, and then goes along about his business. That is Hell Gate pilotage. This bill abolishes that, and puts it on the same footing with the Sandy Hook pilotage.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I ask my friend if the sole object of this bill is to relieve coasting vessels from the compulsory pilotage at Hell Gate?

Mr. HAMLIN. That is all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Why does not the bill just say that? I have no objection to that part of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The object of the bill is to relieve the coastwise commerce from compulsory pilotage wherever and whenever it is imposed in that way. I think it may have one or two applications elsewhere; but that is the main point to be reached, and the law should, I think, be uniform.

Now, sir, one word in relation to compulsory pilotage. I did not mean to be drawn into saying anything about it, because it is not in the bill; but I do mean to say this: that if the bill had been reported precisely as it was introduced by myself I believe I could satisfy this Senate that compulsory pilotage is unnecessary. How are you going to support your trained pilots without compelling another branch of your navigating interest to contribute to their compensation when they do not want their services? My answer is plain and simple. I am the last man in the world who would destroy or any way in the world impair an efficient system of pilotage. If you have forty pilots to-day who pick up $800,000 of compulsory pilotage for vessels passing Hell Gate and render no equivalent therefor—and that I believe is about the amount—and distribute that money among that board, you would, if you had no compulsory pilotage, only support that number of pilots which would be requisite to perform all the services that were required. You might diminish somewhat the service in practice; you would not diminish it in efficiency at all. That is my idea in relation to it.

But that question is not involved in this bill. This bill now proposes to put the passage by way of Hell Gate, so far as it applies to New York, upon precisely the same footing that New York herself has put the passage by the way of Sandy Hook.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it apply with respect to other ports of the United States?

Mr. HAMLIN. In the same way to all of them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It makes it uniform?

Mr. HAMLIN. It makes it uniform. I think there may be one point in Massachusetts where it may affect pilotage, and it may affect one point in the South. I recollect of but three points affected by it, but they are situated precisely like Hell Gate, where pilots are not required, where they are not needed, and where the pilotage is only a tax upon the commerce and the navigation of the country, not called for by any interest in the world or any persons save those who take the money and put it in their pockets without rendering any service.

I did suppose that this bill, coming from the committee unanimously reported, would have received the unanimous approval of the Senate.

I want to say one word more. I see my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has risen to address the Chair, or addressed the Chair about the time I rose. I wish to say that the pilots or the persons representing the pilots, themselves from Philadelphia, (and the chairman will correct me if I am wrong,) stated that they did not object to the bill in this form if it only abolished compulsory pilotage upon coasting vessels, and applying to the passage to Philadelphia.

Mr. CHANDLER. And the same is true of Baltimore.

Mr. SCOTT. I rose to make an inquiry for the purpose of information that I wished from my friend from Maine, and not with reference to the interests of Philadelphia especially. From what has been stated I can see the propriety of relieving vessels trading from point to point at no great distance from each other from the compulsory pilotage fees; but under the language of this bill I wish to make an inquiry. I find the language to be:

That no owner, agent, master, or consignee of any ship or vessel—

Which would include passenger as well as coastwise trading-vessels—

when trading between district and district, or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery, shall, &c.

The inquiry I wish to make is, would not this exempt the passenger-steamships which ply between New York and New Orleans; or, if there be steamers running now from New York to San Francisco, each of those being a separate collection district in the United States, would not the language of this bill exempt such vessels from pilotage?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir; and those vessels are now compelled to carry a pilot by the laws of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I have great doubt about the propriety of the passage of this bill. I think there is a great deal of force in what was said by the Senator from New Jersey, that its tendency may be to destroy pilotage to a very considerable extent. It is utterly impossible for men to engage in any avocation unless they can derive from that avocation sufficient for their maintenance and support; and if you abolish the pilotage or the half-pilotage on coasting trading-vessels I very much question whether there will be sufficient compensation arising out of the business to justify men in engaging in it; and thus it may have a tendency to jeopardize property and jeopardize human life.

I dissent entirely from the view which has been expressed that the masters of vessels engaged in the coasting trade are as familiar with the different localities to which they are bound as pilots who are located at the particular places. I know of a very recent case in my own State. The last time I was in Delaware a gentleman who has a number of vessels engaged in the coasting trade told me that he had just lost a very valuable vessel on the coast of Florida simply because the captain of the vessel refused to take on board a pilot; and the consequence was the total wreck of his vessel. The owner would have been glad to pay for and secure the services of a pilot on board his vessel. So if you relieve and exempt masters and owners of vessels from this half-pilotage, the captain will run the risk very frequently, and frequently the loss of the vessel will ensue and human life become endangered.

I therefore very much question the propriety of the passage of this bill. The States have passed laws in reference to pilotage, and I do not see why they are not just as competent to enact suitable and proper laws in reference to this subject as the Congress of the United States. I received a few days ago a letter from a gentleman largely engaged in the coastwise business, the owner of large interests in a number of vessels engaged in the coasting trade, in which he said that while very frequently they could enter a port without the services of a pilot, yet he was not satisfied in his own mind as a vessel-owner but that it was for the general interest of the vessel-owners that the law as it exists to-day should be continued in force. I therefore have very grave doubts as to whether legislation of this kind will prove an advantage to vessel-owners, and I am fearful that in the end it will prove very considerably disastrous to human life as well as to property.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to state that a large proportion of the vessels going through Hell Gate take a tug. There will be five or six ships in tow of a tug, with an experienced pilot on board that tug; and yet a pilot in one of those little skiffs will come up and demand and collect pilotage from every one of those ships that have paid the tug with an experienced pilot to take them through. Here are some forty-two men who receive over $4,000 a year each for pilotage, when three men are all that are wanted, and more too.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I rise to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maine in reference to the law which he referred to requiring steam-vessels carrying passengers to have a pilot on board. I understand that to be the law.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand this bill will repeal that.

Mr. HAMLIN. O, no.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It provides—

That no owner, agent, master, or consignee of any ship or vessel, when trading between district and district, or between all places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery, shall, by virtue of any law of any State, be compelled, &c.

There is the distinction which I had not noticed.

Mr. President, I should like to look at this bill further, and as the morning hour has expired, I will move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1, the civil-rights bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of Friday last.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to let us dispose of this bill. We can get through with it in a very few minutes, I think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I gave notice on Friday last that I should ask the Senate to-day to proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I do not know whether my friend from New Jersey was in the Senate at that time. I hoped that at this period of the session, under all the circumstances surrounding this bill and the business of the Senate, the Senator from New Jersey would take notice of that fact, and allow me to go on with that bill without antagonizing the measure to which he refers at the present time. When this appropriation bill passes from the Senate or at any rate during the progress of the appropriation bills, before they are all reported to the Senate, there will be ample opportunity for the consideration of the bill to which the Senator refers.

Mr. FRELINGHUSEN. I do not desire to antagonize any measure against the appropriation bills; in fact, I am perfectly aware of the general understanding, by which I feel bound, that the appropriation bills should to a certain extent have precedence and priority; but I appeal to the Senator from Maine, inasmuch as the civil-rights bill has been partly considered, and as action must be taken upon it and will be taken upon it before we adjourn, to permit us to proceed and dispose of that measure which has been so long pending. I think it can be disposed of in a day or two, and then the course will be clear for all the appropriation bills. If this measure is to be called up one day and then interrupted by an appropriation bill, it will delay the proceeding, and there will be a great waste of time; whereas if the Senator will permit us now to take up the civil-rights bill we can probably dispose of it in a little while.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before putting the question on the pending motion, the Chair, to expedite business, will present the House bills on his table for the purpose of reference.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 62) for the relief of Margaret E. West; and

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Edgar L. Spencer:

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia—to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT ON CUSTOMS AND TARIFF LEGISLATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the special report of Edward Young, chief of the Bureau of Statistics, on customs and tariff legislation of the United States, with the appendices, including the tariff acts approved respectively May 1, 1872, and June 6, 1872, and a tabular statement of the rates of duties under said acts and other statutes now in force, five thousand copies; three thousand for the House of Representatives, one thousand for the Senate, and one thousand bound for the use of and distribution by the Treasury Department.

JOSEPH MONTANARI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 311) for the relief of Joseph Montanari, and for other purposes; which were to strike out the second section of the bill, to change the numbers of sections to correspond, and to amend the title by striking out the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the section proposed to be stricken out read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 21 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," approved August 18, 1856, shall not be construed so as to prevent compensation being allowed and paid out of appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the United States to vice-consuls-general, vice-consuls, or vice-commercial agents, who are not or may not be citizens of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore was, by unanimous consent, authorized to appoint the conferees.

REPORT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the following resolution of the Senate:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That seventy-five hundred additional copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1873 be printed for the use of the institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to strike out all after the word "that" where it first occurs, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Ten thousand five hundred copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1873 be printed, two thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and seven-five hundred for the use of the institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

The House amendment was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Hiram W. Love; and the motion is to postpone it.

Mr. BOREMAN. I give notice that at the earliest practicable moment I shall call up and ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. No. 44) to establish the Territory of Pembina, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Hiram W. Love, being the unfinished business before the Senate, the Senator from New Jersey moves the postponement of the same, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866. Is there objection?

Mr. SCOTT. The pending motion upon the bill for the relief of Hiram W. Love was a motion to recommit to the Committee on Claims. I understand the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] who to some extent has charge of the bill, expresses his desire that it should be recommitted, or at least gives his consent to its recommittal. I shall not object to that, although I prefer that it should be disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the bill (S. No. 398) for the relief of Hiram W. Love be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. The Chair will entertain that motion unless objection be made.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it is in order, I now move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As I said to the Senator from Maine, I do not feel at liberty under the general understanding which was had, being bound by it, to antagonize the civil-rights bill against the appropriation bills. I was in hopes that the Senator from Maine might see it consistent with the public interest to suffer this civil-rights bill to be disposed of now; but if he does not, I must content myself with giving notice, that immediately on the determination of this appropriation bill, I shall call up that bill and bring it to a final vote certainly immediately if I can, but at the furthest on the second sitting of the Senate after it shall be taken up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no doubt, or else I should yield to my honorable friend, that it will facilitate the public business to allow the Committee on Appropriations to proceed with its business when it is in order, as there will necessarily occur time between the various appropriation bills for the consideration of other questions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the motion of the Senator from Maine, and the appropriation bill indicated by him will be read.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Before we proceed with the consideration of the bill, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess; and pending an appropriation bill to move to confine debate on amendments thereto to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion; and such motions shall be decided without debate; and no amendment to any such bill making legislative provisions other than such as directly relate to the appropriations contained in the bill shall be received; and no special order shall be made during this session.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am in favor of the resolution except as to the post-office appropriation bill. I desire, for a reason that I will state more fully when the question comes up to except that bill from its operation. I think there will be reasons appealing to the sense of the Senate for action on that bill which would be excluded by this resolution. I would except the appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department from the operation of this rule. There is some legislation which will be moved to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When that bill is reached the Senator can move to suspend this rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps it would be better to except the post-office appropriation bill expressly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to amend the resolution by excepting the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. WEST. I inquire of the Chair whether that resolution is not almost in terms and words the same resolution under which the appropriation bills and the concluding business of the session have been conducted for the two preceding sessions?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Word for word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. WEST. Is not there an addition that there shall be no special order?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is word for word the old rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I wish to except the post-office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to amend the resolution by excepting the post-office appropriation bill. The amendment will be reduced to writing, and reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to add to the resolution the following:

Provided, That this order shall not extend to the post-office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the resolution; and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to give notice that when the Indian appropriation bill comes up I will move the amendment which I now send to the Chair. I move that it may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 16th instant, approved and signed the act (S. No. 347) granting a portion of the United States military reservation at Salt Lake City for cemetery purposes; and that he had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 149) for the relief of certain settlers on the Fort Randall military reservation.

THE DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on Commerce and that it be considered now. It will not take more than half a minute. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3073) to amend section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," to report it back without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1856, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 19. That no such officer as is mentioned in the first, second, third, fourth, sixth, or seventh sections of this act shall, nor shall any consular agent, be absent from his post or the performance of his duties for a longer period than ten days at any one time, without the permission previously obtained of the President. And no compensation shall be allowed for the time of any such absence in any case except in cases of sickness; nor shall any diplomatic or consular officer correspond in regard to the public affairs of any foreign government with any private person, newspaper, or other periodical, or otherwise than with the proper officers of the United States; nor, without the consent of the Secretary of State previously obtained, recommend any person at home or abroad for any employment of trust or profit under the government of the country in which he is located; nor ask or accept, for himself or any other person, any present, emolument, pecuniary favor, office, or title of any kind from any such government.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to remind my friend from Michigan that the revision of the statutes will repeal that very act referred to and with it this act may fall to the ground. Therefore I suggest to him in place of saying "section 19 of such an act be amended so and so," to change the phraseology and make the law as he means it to be. Otherwise, when we come, as I think we shall within a week, to adopt the revised statutes, there will be no such act as this bill refers to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to inquire, if it is proper, what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The business before the Senate is the legislative and executive appropriation bill; but the Senator from Michigan asked unanimous consent to consider this bill which he reported.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will not take thirty seconds.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend has such a seductive way of doing things that it is difficult to interfere.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine object to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If it takes any time I must object.

Mr. CONKLING. It had better be laid aside informally until we can fix it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; let us go on with the appropriation bill. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CONKLING subsequently said: A few moments ago, at my suggestion, a bill was laid aside informally with consent that it might be taken up when a change had been made in it. I now ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3073) to amend section 19 of the act approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States."

Mr. CONKLING. This is the bill reported by the Senator from Michigan. At his suggestion I have taken the section which it is the purpose of the bill to amend and in place of referring to it have specifically carried into the bill the officers to which it relates. I will hand the Secretary the change made, explaining it to him.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. CONKLING, which was to make the bill read as follows:

That no embassador, envoy extraordinary, minister plenipotentiary or minister resident, commissioner to any foreign country, chargé d'affaires, secretary of legation, assistant secretary of legation, interpreter to any legation in any foreign country, consular-general, consul, commercial agent, consular pupils, or consular agent shall be absent from his post or the performance of his duties for a longer period than ten days at any one time, without the permission previously obtained of the President. And no compensation shall be allowed for the time of any such absence in any case except in cases of sickness; nor shall any diplomatic or consular officer correspond in regard to the public affairs of any foreign government with any private person, newspaper, or other periodical, or otherwise than with the proper officers of the United States; nor, without the consent of the Secretary of State previously obtained, recommend any person at home or abroad for any employment of trust or profit under the government of the country in which he is located; nor ask or accept, for himself or any other person, any present, emolument, pecuniary favor, office, or title of any kind from any such government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill relating to embassadors, consuls, and other officers."

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3095) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Before the bill is read I would say a few words in a general way as to its contents for the information of the Senate, though I know very little attention is generally paid to an appropriation bill. As this is the most important of all the general appropriation bills, it may facilitate its progress perhaps if I say a word or two.

This, as the Senate is aware, is the bill which provides for the bulk of the civil service of the country. It makes appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government in all their civil relations. This, I am happy to say, is very severely such a bill. There is little or no extrinsic matter in it. It is in harmony with the general policy of economy that has been practiced in regard to the service for the last three or four years.

The appropriation made last year for the service embraced in this bill for the current fiscal year was $23,753,623. This bill as it came from the House of Representatives appropriated $20,441,010, and as amended by the Senate committee $20,922,638, being in the latter case a decrease in these three branches of the public service of $2,830,995. The bill which you have now to consider as reported by your committee appropriates $20,922,638, which exceeds the House bill by $481,618. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate propose to increase the amount of the appropriation $481,618. The items which constitute this increase are chiefly a provision in the bill for the postages of the several Departments. The House bill appropriated in part for postages for the Departments and in part not. We have supplied that deficiency, and to the amount of $258,500. That is the principal item of excess. The other amendments to the bill relate to the several Bureaus, chiefly in the Treasury Department, and somewhat also in the War Department, but confined exclusively to the Quartermaster's Department. Those are the main particulars in which this bill is amended by the committee.

Thus at a glance the Senate will perceive that it is strictly an appropriation bill; and so far as members of the Senate have heretofore or at any time made themselves acquainted with the public service embraced in these three departments of the Government they will find this bill familiar. There is less in it of an extraneous character than I have ever known in a similar bill at any former period. I am not aware of anything that can challenge to any great extent controversy upon any branch of the public service.

The House of Representatives have in some instances, and the committee have acquiesced, proposed to fix by law salaries which in former years were left to the discretion of the Department. In other words, it has been common for many years to appropriate specifically for clerks at certain salaries and then to give in several of the Bureaus to some of the heads of Departments a sum of money for additional compensation. It has been thought wiser and more consistent with the interests of the public service that these salaries should be fixed definitely, so that Congress may know precisely what is paid, and to that extent it is new. Otherwise than that, the bill very generally and very strictly conforms to the service as established by law.

I will take up no more time, Mr. President. I think the usage has been, and it has been found to be consistent with the dispatch of business, that the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations should be acted upon as the reading of the bill progresses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as the reading of the bill progresses. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate," in line 25, after the word "each," to insert:

Five clerks at $2,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 28, to strike out "two messengers, at $1,296 each; one page, at $720;" and in lieu thereof to insert, "assistant keeper of the stationery, at $1,800."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is a clerical error in the amendment as printed. Instead of striking out "two messengers," there should be provision for one at that place. This is a reduction of the force in the Secretary's office. It was intended to be a reduction of one messenger and one page; but it is two messengers instead, as printed. I move to strike out "two messengers" and insert "one messenger" in line 28, and strike out "each."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so amended if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator why he adds in line 25 five clerks to the force in the Secretary's office.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no addition. That goes on the principle I have just stated. It has been the habit and practice of the Senate to appropriate for temporary clerks ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and the Secretary usually employs six clerks under that appropriation. Now, instead of appropriating for temporary clerks in that way, we have appropriated directly for five clerks. The House of Representatives made no appropriation for temporary clerks, so that it appears in the bill to be an addition of five clerks; but it is really one clerk less than has been employed in the Secretary's office, and at a lower rate of salary than has heretofore been paid. These five clerks are in lieu of the sum of money heretofore appropriated for temporary clerks. It is the same thing precisely except that it is restrictive, and these clerks are put at a lower salary than has been paid heretofore, so as to make a distinction between first-class and second-class clerks there, and to appropriate specifically for them.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill appropriates for twenty clerks in our Secretary's office. For a small body like this that appears rather large.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not so many.

Mr. SHERMAN. Altogether I count twenty clerks here provided for. It can hardly be that it is necessary to have a permanent addition of five clerks. These temporary clerks no doubt were allowed under some pressure during the war and have been continued from time to time, but now they are to be made permanent.

I wish to call attention, without knowing the full facts of the case, to the necessity of the number of clerks that we find here provided for the Senate. There is an appropriation for chief clerk, for principal clerk, for principal executive clerk, minute and Journal clerk, financial clerk, a librarian, and seven clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, and now five clerks in addition, all with a high compensation. As a matter of course, I do not wish to interfere with the bill, but there is a general complaint that the expenses of the Senate are pretty large and the number of the employés unnecessarily great. I think we ought to curtail the service as much as possible.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The remarks of my honorable friend are calculated to lead to a misapprehension that there are five additional clerks here provided for. The fact is that there is one clerk less than the ordinary force in the office. The committee find that service here; it has been appropriated for during many years. It is not the business of the Committee on Appropriations to ascertain precisely what the service ought to be. That belongs to another committee of the Senate. So far as clerks are concerned the appropriation is far less than it was last year; and so far as the other service of the Secretary's office is concerned we have cut it down one messenger, one laborer, and one page.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The clause should read: "One messenger, at $1,296; assistant keeper of the stationery, $1,800;" so as to strike out simply "one page, at $720."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The next amendment was on page 3, lines 42 and 43, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the superintendent of the document-room of the Senate from $1,800 to $2,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 3, after line 43, to strike out:

Two assistants in document-room, at $1,440 each.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

First assistant in the document-room, $2,160; second assistant in the document-room, $1,440.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It has naturally struck us all that the great diminution in the distribution of documents and the printing of public documents would reduce the expenses of the document-room; and if we are disappointed in that, I suppose the chairman of the committee can inform us why it is that the salary of the superintendent himself is increased, and the salary of his first assistant also, giving him a salary equal to that given to the superintendent himself. If the labor is diminished, in other words, the inquiry naturally suggests itself why the salaries are increased.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The salary of the superintendent is not increased. It has been for years exactly what the committee propose here. The amendment is to appropriate precisely what the salary is by law. That was probably overlooked by the House of Representatives when they reduced the appropriation to $1,800. The salary of the assistant superintendent of the document-room is increased from $1,800 to $2,100, and that is an increase to make it correspond with the salary of the assistant superintendent on the House side.

Mr. SCOTT. It is perhaps proper that I should say that my inquiry, which assumed that the labor of these officers was diminished, was based upon a mistake. I suppose this clause referred to the folding-room from which the documents are distributed, but I am informed that it relates to the document-room in the upper portion of the building, instead of the room below; so that my inquiry was prompted by a mistake of my own, which I take pleasure in correcting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the fact.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to give notice of an amendment to the pending bill that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is to increase the number of clerks in the State Department. It makes an increase in salaries of about $13,000, while at the same time it provides for an increase of the income of that Department by way of passports, which it is estimated will amount to about $45,000—an increase of income greater than the increase of expenditure. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 63, after the word "dollars," to strike out the words:

One laborer in stationery-room, $864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 70, 71, and 72, to increase the aggregate appropriation "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the Senate from $124,680.80 to $133,884.80."

Mr. WEST. I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the alteration made in line 28 makes it necessary to change that total amount. It should read $135,130.80, to correspond with the change made in line 28.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it is correct as it is.

Mr. WEST. You have only stricken out one messenger at a salary of $1,296; consequently you must add that amount to the aggregate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We have stricken out something above that which comes in there also.

Mr. WEST. Very well; let it go.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. The aggregate does not govern it any way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will look at it afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 72, to insert the following clause:

To pay Kate Dodson, employed under the Sergeant-at-Arms, for attending the ladies' retiring-room of the Senate, $720 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 88 and 89, to reduce the aggregate appropriation for eighteen pages of the Senate at the rate of $2.50 per day while actually employed from $6,700 to $4,050.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read the next clause of the bill, as follows:

For hire of horses and mail-wagons for carrying the mails, and for one saddle-horse for messenger, $5,475.

Mr. WEST. I desire there, with the sanction of the chairman of the committee, to move to insert after the word "mails," in line 91, the words "for horses and wagons," not changing the total amount of $5,475. As the bill reads now, the transportation appropriated for here would be confined to the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, cutting off the Secretary of the Senate entirely. The object of the amendment is to give the Secretary of the Senate transportation at such amount as the Committee on Contingent Expenses may allow out of this same appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Louisiana to make that motion?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir; merely to insert after the word "mails," in line 91, the words "for horses and wagons."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent at this time to move the amendment indicated to the bill. Is there objection, it not being in order at this time except by unanimous consent? The Chair hears no objection to the present consideration of the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to its present consideration, but it does seem to me that there ought to be no provision made here except for carrying the mails. If the Secretary of the Senate needs a wagon to carry his documents down to the printing office, there is no objection to that; but I do not want to let in by possibility any abuse of the contingent fund of the Senate or the House, so that the money can be used for anything except for transporting matter—not men, but matter—to the printing office or carrying the mails. I am afraid that this amendment may lead possibly to the continuance of an abuse, which has been cut off by the House of Representatives in all Departments of the Government. There is no necessity for the Secretary of the Senate having a wagon to carry himself or anybody else, any more than for ourselves. If we use a wagon, we have to hire it and pay for it; and I do not think it is necessary for the officers of the Senate or the officers of the Government to have these conveniences of transportation. The House, I understand, throughout this bill and throughout all the appropriation bills, have cut off these facilities of transportation of men and persons, and have confined the appropriations to the transportation of property; and I hope the Senate will adhere to the action of the House in that respect.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will examine the bill he will find that the House has not done what he supposes, and in fact could not do it. The principal debate there arose over the allowance of transportation for the Attorney-General. In that debate it was shown that he had to attend a number of courts, that law books had to be carried backward and forward, and that the Solicitor-General and the Attorney-General himself were constantly in attendance on the courts, and sometimes two or three courts on the same day; and on that showing, which certainly was reasonable, and further that the amount appropriated was very much less than would be required for the occasional hire of carriages for the purpose, the House restored the item, and the same item is left in the bill for every other Department of the Government; that is, for necessary transportation, limited as it is by the amount appropriated, and extremely limited. The allowance for horses and wagons is still continued, and it must be continued unless we expect that the work of the Government will not be done. The Secretary of the Senate is required by our rules to carry and is continually carrying bills to the executive department. Is he to walk, or is he to hire some carriage which may be out on the stand, and pay as much for a single trip of that kind as it would cost to make twenty trips under the present system? Further, he is in continual correspondence with the Government Printing Office, carrying out the orders of the Senate and the orders of Congress for the delivery of manuscripts of bills and documents to be printed. Of course they are sent back by the Public Printer. Then again he is required to bring money down from the Treasury. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Ohio, if he still insists on his objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand there is a provision in the bill which covers the point that I wanted to make. I do not like to call attention to any of these matters.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course if the objection is withdrawn I do not wish to argue the point; but I was going to remark further that the Secretary of the Senate is compelled to draw money from the Treasury of the United States to pay expenses, the salaries of Senators and officers, to send to the Government Printing Office the manuscripts that we intrust to his charge for printing, and to carry bills to the President of the United States to be signed, and sometimes the work is extremely onerous. To require him to do all this on foot, or to say that he shall hire chance conveyances, is, in the one case, to require him to do that which he could not do, which it would not be decent to require him to do, and is, in the other case, to adopt a system much more expensive than the present one. That is the reason why this allowance is made and has been made for years, and it cannot be dispensed with.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the section on page 72 covers the officers of Congress as well as Government officers, I am perfectly willing to let this amendment be made. What I want is to prevent the abuse of contingent funds. No one objects, certainly I would not object, to the hire of carriages or the ownership of carriages when necessary to conduct the public business; but I hope we shall never again have any debate in regard to the use of public carriages for private purposes. It is one of those subjects which I do not wish to discuss or allude to. However, if the Secretary of the Senate is a civil officer of the Government—I am not sure that he is——

Mr. SARGENT. There is no question about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Members of Congress are not civil officers of the Government.

Mr. SARGENT. The Secretary of the Senate is not a member of Congress. He is an officer of a branch of the Government, just as much as an officer under the Executive is. There is no doubt about that. We have judicial officers, executive officers, and legislative officers. I do not think a Senator is an officer of the Government; but the Secretary of the Senate unquestionably is an officer of the Government just as much as the Secretary of the Treasury is. The Senator will notice that the committee do not propose to modify section 2. We let that stand in its full force, although I have an impression that it will be found to bite pretty hard in some directions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not believe that officers of Congress are officers of the Government. The term "civil officers of the Government" was originally applied to executive officers.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think there is any doubt about it; but if there is in the Senator's mind, it can be obviated when we reach section 2 by adding the words "or officers of Congress."

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall have no objection to the present amendment if the Senator will move that amendment when we come to that section.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall have no objection to such an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. WEST.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in line 100, in the appropriations for the Capitol Police to increase the appropriation "for one captain" from $1,800 to $2,088.

Mr. WRIGHT. In this connection there are several amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations touching the Capitol police, and I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a matter which perhaps I ought to know without making the inquiry. I see that the bill as it came from the House provided that the captain of the Capitol police should have $1,800 and it is proposed by this amendment to increase it to $2,088. Am I correct in supposing that that amount, $2,088, is the amount provided by law, and which has been appropriated heretofore?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. So that there is no increase?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No, sir; and the same remark is true in regard to all the amendments in this clause.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then the House proposed to cut these officers down, and the Committee on Appropriations leave them to stand where they were before?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; the committee have reported in harmony with the law as it stands, not by appropriations merely, but by an act of Congress.

Mr. WRIGHT. So that this is no increase beyond the existing law, but the House proposed to cut down these salaries and the committee leave them as they stand now by existing law?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is the way of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 102, to increase the appropriation for three lieutenants of the Capitol police from $1,600 each to $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 103, to increase the appropriation for twenty-seven privates of the Capitol police from $1,200 each to $1,584 each, and to increase the aggregate from $32,412 to $42,768.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 107, to increase the total appropriation for the Capitol police and watchmen from $47,000 to $58,256.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 113, after the word "duty," to strike out "from" and insert "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 127, in the appropriations "for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives," in the clause making provision for the salaries of the Chief Clerk and Journal clerk of the House to strike out the words "while such positions are held by the present incumbents and no longer," and to reduce the item from $3,600 to $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 130 to reduce the appropriation for salaries of "two reading clerks, assistant Journal clerk, and tally clerk" of the House from $3,000 each to $2,592 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 184, after "session," to strike out the words "estimated at five months," and to reduce the appropriation for salaries of twelve messengers of the House during the session at the rate of $1,440 each per annum from $7,260 to $4,356.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 192 and 193, to reduce the aggregate of the appropriation for compensation of the officers, clerks, messengers, and others receiving an annual salary in the service of the House of Representatives from $98,316 to $92,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the proviso to the clause making appropriations for the office of the Congressional Printer, to strike out in lines 227 to 231 the words:

Be, and the same hereby is, repealed; that the title of said officer shall hereafter be "Public Printer," and he shall be deemed an officer of the United States; and whenever a vacancy in said office shall hereafter occur, the same.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Shall cease and determine and become of no effect, from and after the date of the first vacancy occurring in said office; that the title of said officer shall thereafter be Public Printer, and he shall be deemed an officer of the United States, and said office.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That so much of the act entitled "An act providing for the election of a Congressional Printer," approved February 22, 1867, as provides for the election of such officer by the Senate, and provides that such officer shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, shall cease and determine and become of no effect from and after the date of the first vacancy occurring in said office; that the title of said officer shall thereafter be Public Printer, and he shall be deemed an officer of the United States, and said office shall be filled by appointment by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 305, in the items of appropriation for public buildings and grounds, to strike out "five" before "watchmen" and insert "four;" and to reduce the appropriation for four watchmen in reservation No. 2, (being the Smithsonian grounds,) from $3,600 to $2,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 368, in the appropriations for the Department of State, before the words "official postage-stamps" to strike out "furnishing" and insert "purchase of;" and after "postage-stamps" to strike out the words "to an amount not exceeding $50,000 face value, one" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

For purchase of official postage-stamps, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 376, in the appropriations for the Treasury Department, to increase the appropriation for "chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the Treasury building" from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 377, to strike out "five clerks" and insert "eight chiefs of divisions."

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the amendment proposed by the committee by substituting "ten" for "eight," and I hope the committee will agree to that proposition.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think the Senator will find that his purpose is accomplished in the latter part of the bill, under the head of "Loans." There are two there, which make the "ten" that he supposes to be necessary.

Mr. BOUTWELL. As I understand, there are two then omitted, the chief of the division of records and files, and the chief of the mails division, for which only $1,800 compensation would be allowed under this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not certain that that is not so.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are twelve divisions in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, and I understand this bill makes provision for ten only.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is so. It makes provision for ten as it stands, undoubtedly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Previous to 1869 there were twenty-three of these divisions, and each one, as far as the salary was concerned, was as expensive as the present organization.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is my information about that.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think we ought to allow full pay to the twelve, who all stand in the same relation to the Department. There is a difference of duties, but under the organization there is no difference of responsibility or of position. I hope the committee will agree to the proposition I have moved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator can move that at a later period perhaps as we go on. If the Senator would allow the amendments of the committee first to be acted upon, it would be better.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But when the amendments reported by the committee are acted on, I understand it will not be in order until we come into the Senate to substitute "ten" for "eight" in this clause.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is true; but the Senator will have an opportunity in the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But if it is to be done, it might as well be done now, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. My understanding is, that the House provided for five chiefs of divisions in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Senate Committee on Appropriations increased the number from five to eight, so as to provide for what they believed to be the wants of the Department after examination. I should think it would be very unwise to increase the number. The committee have already increased it three over the provision of the House.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think the Senator from West Virginia will agree that the officer who has charge of the mails receivable and those that are sent as well, and who last year received in the mails for the time under his own custody, mutilated notes, seven-thirty bonds, bonds for exchange of various kinds, amounting to $109,000,000, for which at the moment there was no responsibility except the integrity of the person opening the letters, should receive a salary of more than $1,800; and he is one of the officers of whom I speak, and the other has charge of the records and files of the Department. I hope there will be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order on the amendment. It increases the appropriation; and no notice has been given of it, as is required by the rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes that to be a good point of order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I did not understand the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is that the amendment increases the appropriation, that no notice of it has been given, and that it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I give notice now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can submit the amendment and have it referred to the committee, and then it will be in order to offer it hereafter.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I submit the amendment to be referred to the committee, and I will offer it to-morrow. I hope the Senator from California will withdraw the point of order. If this proposition cannot be met on its merits, it had better go on.

Mr. SARGENT. I have strong doubt about the propriety of the amendment. We went very far in raising the number of these officers to eight. We nearly doubled the amount allowed by the House of Representatives, and went as far as we ought to go.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to ask the Senator from California how it can be justified that a messenger around the doors of this Senate, or a clerk who merely reads, and who goes away when the session of Congress has ended, receives $2,100 or $2,500 a year, and in some instances $3,600, and yet an officer upon whom the responsibility rests for the time being during the year of the custody of $109,000,000 of public securities and money is to be turned off on a salary of $1,800?

Mr. SARGENT. If that is a question for me, I will state that I have no further responsibility in the matter than the Senator himself. When he submits an amendment to cut down the salaries to which he alludes I will act on the proposition; but this is a question of increase, and I am objecting to increase. If $3,000 or $2,000 is not sufficient to remunerate a man who has the responsibility of $109,000,000, what will be necessary? Shall it be $5,000 or $10,000 or $50,000? I do not know there is any particular amount which compensates a man. The service probably can be performed for the amount provided for by law and now provided for by this bill. If it cannot be, it may be an argument in favor of raising the amount. The committee thought that the sum here appropriated was sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and of course debate on an amendment ruled out is out of order. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, in line 377, to strike out "five clerks" and insert "eight chiefs of divisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 379, after the word "marine," to insert "and life-saving stations;" and after the word "navigation," in line 380, to insert the words "of internal revenue, of sub-treasury, of stationery, printing, and blanks."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 381, page 17, to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000" as the appropriation for the salary of each head of division in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 382, to strike out "five principal clerks" and insert "eight principal clerks of divisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 384, to increase the appropriation "for two disbursing clerks" of the Treasury Department from $2,200 to $2,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 404 and 405 to increase the total appropriation for the Secretary's office of the Treasury Department from $323,100 to $342,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause appropriating for the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in line 528 to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-four" before "clerks of class four;" in the same line to strike out the words "forty-three" and insert "forty-eight" before "clerks of class three;" in line 529 to strike out "forty-two" and insert "fifty-two" before "clerks of class two;" in line 530 to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty" before "clerks of class one;" in line 531 to strike out "five" and insert "seven" as the number of messengers; in line 532 to strike out "two" and insert "three" as the number of assistant messengers; in the same line to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen" as the number of laborers; and in lines 533 and 534 to increase the total amount of the appropriation from $308,380 to $351,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 538 and 539, to increase the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue from $1,990,542 to $2,190,542.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 543, to reduce the appropriation "for salaries, expenses, and fees of supervisors, store-keepers, agents, surveyors, gaugers, and miscellaneous expenses" from $2,600,000 to $2,400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Maine authorizes me to move now to strike out this clause at the close of the item just read: "And hereafter no gauger shall receive a greater compensation than five dollars a day," in lines 544 and 545. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations referred this matter to the Committee on Finance, who examined it very carefully and consulted also with the officers of the Internal Revenue Department, and we are entirely satisfied, unanimously so, that the present law is carefully guarded and very carefully worded, and that it would not be improved by this provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to strike out lines 544 and 545.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is due to the Senate that I should say that on that subject the Committee on Appropriations felt an embarrassment, because the clause undertook to fix the compensation of a class of officers of which they had no knowledge to justify them in having a judgment upon the subject; and they therefore referred the whole question to the Committee on Finance, who are presumed to be familiar with the matter, as the law came from that committee. We left it to them, as we must necessarily, this being a proposed change in the public service, the business of our Committee on Appropriations being to appropriate for the service as they find it. We referred the matter to the Committee on Finance, and feel somewhat bound by their advice in regard to it; and therefore I make no opposition to this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was under the heading "Treasury miscellaneous," to increase the appropriation for the purchase of official postage-stamps from $5,000 to $200,000, in lines 567 and 568.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the same heading, in line 580, to increase from $13,100 to $19,100 the appropriation "for rent of buildings."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items for the office of the assistant treasurer at New York to strike out in lines 635 and 636 the words "two clerks, at $1,500 each," and to reduce the total appropriation in line 646 from $150,980 to $147,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items for the office of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco to insert in lines 673 and 674 the words "for stamp clerk, $2,400;" in lines 675 and 676 to strike out "four watchmen, $4,000," and insert "three night watchmen, at $1,500 each; for one day watchman, $960," and to increase the total appropriation in lines 678 and 679 from $21,300 to $22,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to give notice of an amendment from the Committee on Agriculture which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

It was so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the items for the office of the assistant treasurer at New Orleans, lines 715 and 716, to insert "three night watchmen, at $720 each," and in lines 716 and 717 to increase the total of the appropriation from $14,340 to $16,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 808 the following clause:

For compensation to special agents to examine the books, accounts, and money on hand at the several sub-treasuries and depositories, including national banks acting as depositories under the act of the 6th of August, 1846, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the clause "to reopen the branch mint at New Orleans to be conducted hereafter as a mint," &c., in lines 889 and 890 to insert "superintendent, $3,500," and after the word "assayer" in line 890, to strike out "and melter and refiner" and insert "who shall perform the duties of melter;" and in line 892 to strike out "each," and in the same line to strike out "three workmen, $3,000," and insert "five workmen, $5,000," and to increase the total appropriation from $15,000 to $18,000 in line 896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the items of appropriation for the assay office at New York, in line 900 to strike out "chief clerks, $2,400," and insert "chief clerk and principal calculator, $3,000; weighing clerk, $3,000; paying clerk, $2,200; bar clerk, $2,000;" and to increase the total appropriation in line 907 from $36,100 to $43,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 910 and 911 to increase the appropriation "for miscellaneous items and repairs" at the New York assay office from $20,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, beginning at line 920:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; clerk, $1,000; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $6,400.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope that amendment will be reserved for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be regarded as agreed to if there be no objection, and reserved for consideration in the Senate at the request of the Senator from North Carolina. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation for the office of the Quartermaster-General, in lines 1071 and 1072, to increase the number of clerks of class two provided for from twenty-four to thirty; of clerks of class one, from forty to fifty-five; in lines 1073 and 1074, to insert "one female messenger at thirty dollars per month;" in line 1076, to increase the appropriation for the salary of one engineer from $800 to $1,200, and in lines 1081, 1082, and 1083 to increase the aggregate amount appropriated from $171,520 to $198,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to line 1171. I am informed that that clause will now discharge ten enlisted men in the Ordnance Department, and that the department really need three; that that number at least is indispensable. I would therefore ask the chairman of the committee to accept an amendment, after the word "the" before "engineer" to insert "Ordnance and;" so as to read:

Except in the Signal Office and the Ordnance and Engineer Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, if there be no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1183, to increase the appropriation "for one engineer in charge of heating the War Department building" from $1,200 to $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1392, in the clause appropriating for contingent expenses of the Pension Office to increase the item "for actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud as provided by law" from $30,000 to $45,000; and in line 1400, to increase the total appropriation for contingent expenses from $73,800 to $88,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to make a verbal amendment in line 1440, by striking out the word "act" and inserting "paragraph;" so as to read:

And no money appropriated by this paragraph shall be expended for advertising in newspapers published in the city of Washington other than the Patent Office Official Gazette.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be considered as agreed to if no objection be made. It is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for clerks, &c., of the Post-Office Department, in lines 1546 and 1547 to insert "chief of division of postal stamps, $2,500," and in line 1578 to increase the total appropriation from $439,952 to $442,452.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriation for "contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department," in line 1582 to reduce the item of "gas" from $6,500 to $4,500; and in line 1590 to reduce the total from $46,900 to $44,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1744, in the appropriations for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, to strike out "two" and insert "three" as the number of clerks of class two, and to change the total from $25,600 to $27,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1748 to strike out "three" and insert "four," and in line 1749 to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of the portion (four floors) of the building occupied by the Department of Justice, $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1752, to increase the appropriation for official postage-stamps for the Department of Justice from $500 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That every clerk of the circuit or district court of the United States, United States marshal, or United States district attorney, shall reside permanently in the district where his official duties are to be performed and shall give his personal attention thereto; and in case any such officer shall remove from his district or shall fail to give personal attention to the duties of his office, except in case of sickness, such office shall be deemed vacant.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to add at the end of section 2 these words:

Provided, That in the southern district of New York said officers may reside within twenty miles of said district.

I have consulted with the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and he has no objection to the amendment, the object of which is sufficiently apparent. It is not easy for the marshal of the southern district of New York or the clerk or district attorney always, from their salaries, to live in the city of New York. One resides across a ferry in one direction, and another in another, that not interfering at all with the discharge of their duties. The amendment does not impair the scope of this provision, as it is intended to make this exception.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That no civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law, or shall make any private use of such property, or of the services or labor of any person in the employment or service of the United States which service or labor is paid for by the United States: Provided, That this shall not be construed to deprive any officer of the United States of such fees as are or may be expressly provided by law in addition to the salary or compensation of such officer, or of the use of such property as may be expressly by law appropriated to the use of such officer.

Mr. CONKLING. If I can have the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I should like to make an inquiry about this section:

That no civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law—

I make no inquiry about that—or shall make any private use of such property, or of the services or labor of any person in the employment or service of the United States, which service or labor is paid for by the United States.

If the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations writes a letter for the chairman of that committee to a member of his family or to some other friend or acquaintance, would that act be improper or criminal within this language? The use of property might give rise to another question. But first I ask the attention of the chairman to that language, to know whether it goes so far that if any Senator borrows the fingers of the clerk of the committee to help him dispatch a matter of business, this section would lay hold upon him and deal with him?

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator if the provision does not cover that ground?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not see how. It reads:

Provided, That this shall not be construed to deprive any officer of the United States of such fees as are or may be expressly provided by law in addition to the salary or compensation of such officer, or of the use of such property as may be expressly by law appropriated to the use of such officer.

It seems to me, that does not touch the question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Is a Senator a civil officer? I believe it has been decided that he is not.

Mr. CONKLING. I believe it was decided in Blount's case that a Senator was not an officer under the United States, and therefore was not impeachable; but I should think the words "no civil officer of the Government" were broader. Of him it is provided that he shall not "receive any compensation or perquisites," and so on, or make any private use "of the services or labor of any person in the employment or service of the United States." I doubt whether that distinction is broad enough to stand upon. The general purpose of this section I make no objection to; on the contrary, I agree to it; but I do not think we ought to employ words which will turn it into derision or which will have an effect that nobody intends.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee found this section in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. It appropriates nothing; it is legislation, not directly with reference to the bill itself, but in reference to the public service as well outside. It is a pretty stringent provision undoubtedly, and the meaning and scope of it are not exactly apparent, in my judgment, and the committee so felt. It is a little difficult to specify precisely what it does mean or what the effect of it would be. It may be that it is liable to the criticism suggested by the Senator from New York. I cannot say that it is not. I think, however, that it is rather in harmony with the sentiment in regard to public men, that they ought to go under checkrein and bridle. It attracted the attention of the committee somewhat; but we did not regard it as so serious a matter on the whole as to render it necessary to interpose an objection by the committee. As it was not a matter of appropriation, but regulating the service provided for in the bill, the committee felt that it was proper enough to leave it to the Senate for its own consideration without any action on their part.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know whether there is any express law for it, but it occurs to me that the Commissioner of Agriculture does now live, and has for years, having a very small salary, lived in the Agricultural Department building, and has a general supervision of the interests of that department, which not living there he could not have, and it would be a great injury to the Government if he was not there to look after the property. Whether there is any law authorizing him to occupy that building I do not know.

Mr. CONKLING. Then that is the case of an officer who lives on the department and not on his salary. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, enthusiasm in legislation is quite likely to be a dangerous thing, and this provision I think may be justly described as enthusiastic. It has been inserted in the bill in deference to an outcry against usages and habits which I found in Washington when first I came to Washington, now about fourteen years ago. Those usages were then so inveterate that they were the growth of a custom to which the memory of man even then did not run to the contrary. Having now reached, as we are told, an exceptionally depraved, and debased era, having come to a time when, if we are to believe much testimony that we hear, all men and especially public men, are more lax, disorderly, profligate, inattentive, than they ever were before, we have also reached a time when the same things which were customary, notorious, universal, and unchallenged, excite so much indignation that the country is hardly large enough to hold the noise.

As part of this criticism it has been seen that officials ride in vehicles, some of them, which they do not own or pay for themselves, each one as his predecessor, and his predecessor, and a generation of predecessors, going back as far as our annals go, did ride. For the purpose of meeting that and other such abuses, to which we are now all so broadly awake, this language has been used, and as it stands I think its fair interpretation would be a denunciation of the act of the clerk of a committee or any clerk employed by the Secretary of the Senate or about the Capitol who should for five or thirty minutes perform the office of amanuensis to a Senator or to anybody else. That pushes it, I submit, to an extreme. It enacts an absurdity, and must go very far to turn into derision and make a caricature of a section which, properly regarded, would be very wholesome and proper.

I do not know, Mr. President, I am free to say, why an official who happens to be the head of a Department or a Cabinet minister should be furnished with a carriage to ride to the Capitol or to the Department, or to carry books and papers, any more than I should be furnished with the same convenience for the same purpose. We all have papers to carry and books to carry and errands to do, and we all know that scattered as the Departments are, wide apart and all of them distant from the Capitol, except as to those Senators who are able to keep a carriage of their own, (and there are such, I believe,) it is very difficult for members of this body to get about upon their feet or in horse-cars so as to do the work which they are compelled to do, even the duties which their oath prescribes—not speaking of the countless things which are put upon us because we are Senators; and I know no reason, I admit, why an executive officer any more than we, should be furnished with means of locomotion with which to do his business, or save his breath, or his shoe-leather, or his private purse in respect to car-fare or carriage-hire. But we all know that the custom as it prevails is immemorial. However, as I say, we are now all wide awake in respect to it; everything is to be reformed; and we shall be out of fashion unless we have spasms of propriety all around in reference to things which only ten years ago were unchallenged and uncriticised by any human being. Now, I agree to that. I want to conform to the fashion. The only thing that I disagree to is the idea that when we find ourselves thus virtuous, we should at the same time accept the idea that we are more wanting in virtue and propriety than any other generation of men who ever appeared upon the stage. That part of it I do object to; I do not believe a word of it. I suggest that this section should be changed so as to mean what it is designed to mean, and not to include also that the excess of which will lead to its being stricken out altogether hereafter and provoke more ridicule than commendation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Does the Senator from New York offer an amendment?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not like to interfere with the Senator having the bill in charge. I will offer an amendment if it be his wish.

Mr. CARPENTER. The language of this section is:

That no civil officer of the Government shall hereafter receive any compensation or perquisites, directly or indirectly, from the Treasury or property of the United States beyond his salary or compensation allowed by law, or shall make any private use of such property—

That is, property belonging to the United States—or of the services or labor of any person in the employment or service of the United States which service or labor is paid for by the United States.

Now, I think there is a distinction between an officer of the Government and an officer under the Government. The Constitution in article 1, section 6, clause 2, provides:

And no person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

The same clause also provides that—

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time.

Again, article 2, section 1, clause 2, provides:

But no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, &c.

And I think that is a distinction which obtains both in the Constitution and laws.

Again, article 14, section 3:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath, as a member of Congress, &c.

Therefore, while a Senator, in my opinion, is not an officer under the United States—and this clause of the Constitution draws that precise distinction—a Senator or Representative shall not accept an office under the Constitution; his office is not, in the phraseology of the Constitution and laws, an office "under the United States," but he is an "officer of the United States." Now then, this section, as I understand it, goes so far that if the clerk of a committee should after the adjournment of the committee be requested by the chairman to write at his dictation a note to his wife saying when Congress would adjourn and when he would be home, that would be a violation of this statute. I think it would be a violation of this statute for any Senator to come here on Saturday when the Senate is not in session and sit in his chair to write a private letter about his own business. That would be a private use of property which he is authorized to use officially.

I move, Mr. President, not for the particular reasons specified alone, but because it has no sort of relation or reference to appropriations, to strike out the third section of the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that inasmuch as the same point has been made heretofore, and inasmuch as we are now considering the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations, it would be better to go through with those amendments, and then we can take up this question or such amendments as may be suggested to the section outside of it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in section 4, line 7, after the word "loan" to insert "except the second section of the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled 'An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;'" so that the section will read:

That the act entitled "An act limiting the appropriations of certain moneys for the preparation, issue, and reissue of certain securities of the United States, and for other purposes," approved May 23, 1872, and all other acts and parts of acts making permanent appropriations for the expenses of the national loan, except the second section of the act approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," are hereby repealed, this repeal to take place on the 1st day of July next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, line 18, in the appropriations to defray the expenses of the national loan for clerical and other employés in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to strike out "one clerk of loans and one clerk of currency, at $2,500 each," and insert "two chiefs of divisions, namely, of loans and currency, at $3,000 each; and in line 30 to increase the total amount of the appropriation from $133,933.50 to $134,933.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 4, line 32, in the clause providing for the "office of Treasurer," to increase the number of clerks of class four from "seventeen" to "twenty-eight;" in line 33 to reduce the number of clerks of class three from "six" to "four;" in line 34 to increase the number of counters and copyists from "one hundred" to "one hundred and forty-five;" in line 36, to increase the number of messengers from "four" to "six," and of assistant messengers from "twenty" to "twenty-six;" and in lines 38 and 39 to increase the total of the appropriation from $165,760 to $228,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 1, to strike out the words "passage of this act, and on;" in line 2, after the word "July" to insert "1874, and;" and after the word "year," in line 3, to strike out "hereafter," and insert "thereafter;" so that the section will read:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

Mr. SARGENT. I remind the chairman that "1874" there should be "1875."

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. No; no.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, line 7, after the words "provided, that" to strike out the following words:

This provision shall not apply to river and harbor appropriations, or light-house appropriations, or public buildings, the appropriations for which shall only lapse according to the provisions of existing laws.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the beginning of each session, report to Congress any balances of appropriations for specific objects affected by this section that may need to be reappropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection this amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to except from the operation of that amendment the appropriations for public buildings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator withdraw that motion for the present, and allow the Chair to understand whether the last amendment of the committee is agreed to or not? Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will not object at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment is agreed to. That completes the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I submit two amendments which I may want to offer to-morrow, so as to come within the rule, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be so referred.

Mr. HAMLIN. I appeal to my friend from Vermont to allow me to ask the Senate to take up and dispose of the pilotage bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Before this bill passes from the consideration of the Senate I wish to make a verbal amendment in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations. It will take but a moment. On page 49, lines 1182, 1183, 1184, 1185, and 1886, should be struck out where they occur and inserted after line 1188. As they stand now, the appropriations refer to the wrong buildings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now yield to my friend from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I have conferred with the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN,] and I think he is satisfied with the pilotage bill. I do not think it will take any further time, and I therefore ask the Senate to take it up and dispose of it. The appropriation bill can be laid aside informally.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I have an amendment to offer to the pending appropriation bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to give notice of an amendment to the proviso to the fifth section of the bill, to exempt from it appropriations for public buildings.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to offer an amendment to the river and harbor appropriation bill, for the purpose of having it printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS. I have an amendment to offer to the pending appropriation bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. There is no necessity for printing those amendments.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the request for printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will not be printed, but referred at once to the Committee on Appropriations.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is to be no debate on the pilotage bill, so that we can finish it immediately, I will withdraw my motion for an executive session; otherwise I shall not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 675) to relieve ships and vessels from compulsory pilot fees in certain cases, the pending question being on the first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, in section 1, line 4, to strike out the words "duly registered or enrolled," and to insert "when trading between district and district or between different places in the same district, or carrying on the fishery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the second section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That no owner, agent, consignee, or master of any ships or vessel, duly enrolled or registered, who shall employ a tug or tow-boat on entering or departing from any port or harbor, or entering, passing through, or leaving any channel, passage, or strait, within the waters of the United States, shall be compelled to pay pilotage or pilot fees by virtue of the laws of any State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

MORNING HOUR OF MONDAY.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules be required to inquire into the expediency of so amending House Rule No. 130 as to dispense with the call of States for resolutions during the first hour of Mondays.

It is very evident from the proceedings this morning on this side, and by what I have seen on the other side, that it is in the power of either side of this House to prevent the other from having any resolution offered under the call of States for resolutions. I therefore propose that the Committee on the Rules inquire into the propriety of so amending the rules as to dispense with that call, and thus save thirty or forty minutes of the morning hour every Monday.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Rules.

TAX ON ECCLESIASTICAL PROPERTY.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following petition; which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, citizens and residents of the United States, would hereby respectfully petition your honorable bodies to repeal the first section of the act approved June 17, 1870, entitled "An act exempting from taxes certain property in the District of Columbia," &c., and providing that "all churches and school-houses, and all buildings, grounds, and property appurtenant thereto and used in connection therewith, in the District of Columbia, shall be exempt from any and all taxes and assessments, national, municipal, or county." We ask this for the following reasons:

1. This part of said act we understand to be at variance with the spirit, if not the letter, of the first amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." Since the exemption from taxation of churches, parsonages, ecclesiastical houses, and sectarian schools in the District of Columbia is precisely equivalent, in effect, to a direct appropriation by Congress for their support, we conceive this measure to violate what all the expounders of the Constitution declare to have been its manifest intent and design, namely, to sever all religious organizations from any connection with or dependence upon the civil government, except for equal and impartial protection. This part of said act, therefore, we consider to be unconstitutional.

2. This part of said act we conceive to be also contrary to equity and justice, inasmuch as its effect is to increase our relative proportion of the national taxes, to the end of relieving altogether from taxation certain churches and church properties in the District of Columbia. We consider it, therefore, to be unjust.

3. All history shows that the effect of exempting churches from taxation is to accumulate property in the hands of ecclesiastical bodies to a very dangerous extent, and at last to compel resort to confiscation as the only means of escaping the great evils thus generated. The examples of England, of Italy, and of Mexico, of Spain, Austria, and France, are sufficient warnings against adopting a policy which is hostile to American ideas and American institutions. That the non-taxation of church property is tending to the same results here as elsewhere is evident from the fact that, while the number of church members in the United States was not doubled between 1850 and 1870, the value of church property during the same period was quadrupled, advancing from $87,328,801 to $354,483,581. At the same rate its value in 1890 will be over $1,418,000,000; and such rapid accumulation of wealth in ecclesiastical hands is most perilous to civil and religious liberty. This part of said act therefore we consider to be unsafe.

For the reasons, consequently, that this part of said act is unconstitutional, unjust, and unsafe, we respectfully ask that it be forthwith repealed.

DISBURSEMENTS OF PUBLIC MONEY, ETC.

Mr. THORNBURGH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3395) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate and secure the safe-keeping of public moneys intrusted to disbursing officers of the United States," approved June 14, 1866, and an act entitled "An act to facilitate the settlement of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States and to secure certain moneys to the people of the United States to whom they are due and who are entitled to receive the same, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL-BANK CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER. There comes over from last Monday, under a motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] for suspension of the rules, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates and for an increase of national-bank notes," approved July 12, 1870, and to provide for a more equal distribution of the national banking currency.

Mr. KASSON. I rise for the purpose of asking consent of the House that that bill may stand over on the same conditions for another week, with the view of avoiding any apparent antagonism with the action of the Committee on Banking and Currency on another bill upon the same subject.

Mr. DUNNELL. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to state——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] can withdraw the bill and present it again.

Mr. KASSON. I prefer not to do that. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] says that if I will say two weeks he will not object.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to a postponement for two weeks.

Mr. MAYNARD. Perhaps it may facilitate the settlement of this question to state that I am instructed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to ask that the currency bill now on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments be referred to our committee, with leave to report at any time. I make that request now, and I am authorized to say that if such action be had, the committee will consider the bill diligently and report it promptly.

Mr. KASSON. I hope that will be done, and then I will ask that my bill stand over for one week.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to have it understood, if this order is made, that the bill shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole, subject to amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill as it now stands by previous order of the House can be considered in the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. As in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. Not as in Committee of the Whole, but as it was before. It is now on the Speaker's table. It is a House bill which the House by suspension of the rules gave the right to have considered in the House. It was considered in the House. It returns now with a Senate amendment. That does not divest it of the previous privilege it had, and it may therefore still be considered in the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am content, but let it be open to amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am not authorized by the committee, having no instructions to that effect, but I can only state my own individual feeling, which is now the same that I have announced on different occasions since I brought this subject before the House, and that is that a measure which reflects the opinion of the House shall have fair opportunity to be presented.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have no objection.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I object unless it is to be open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. It will be open to amendment if a majority of the House desire to amend it. It will be wholly in the control of a majority of the House.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But only by voting down the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The House did that four or five times before.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We do not want to go through that again.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the only way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the bill to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency with the right to report at any time?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I object.

Mr. KASSON. I now ask the question be again put on my motion. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] objected before under misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to postponing the bill of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] which comes over from last Monday to stand in the same position on Monday next after the morning hour as it is in now?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly

Mr. HAYS. I ask that the petition be read which accompanies it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the late floods have made fearful havoc along the banks of the Tombigbee and Warrior Rivers; and whereas thousands of acres of the most productive lands in the South are even yet under water, hundreds of families driven from their homes, an army of laborers without present or prospective means of support; and whereas more fearful consequences may be feared if they are not provided against in time, and as "Man cannot live by bread alone" is a true saying, it is just and true that physically he cannot live without bread; and whereas the destitution among our poor people cannot be attributed to them as a fault, or as the result of laziness, misconduct, or any other thing personal to them, and their condition being truly pitiable and in many instances appalling: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we hereby ask the special attention of our Senators and Representatives in Congress to these citizens of the fourth congressional district of Alabama and to their condition, and we beseech them for God and the country's sake, and in behalf of our common humanity, to try to secure some relief for them.

Resolved, (2.) That as our people here are impoverished and disheartened and have not the ability if they have the will to help one another in the distresses that have overtaken us, we ask the Government to help us and ourselves. These poor people cannot starve, and we beseech that they be relieved otherwise than at the sacrifice of the peace of the communities in which they live.

Resolved, (3.) That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to Hon. CHARLES HAYS, member of Congress from this district, with the request that he call the attention of Congress to the facts as herein set forth; and that he request the co-operation of the Alabama delegation in assisting him to procure the aid herein most respectfully asked for.

JEFFERSON McKASSON,
Chairman.
JOHN W. DEVEEN,
Secretary.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is it in order to amend by including the sufferers by the recent flood in Massachusetts?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Had there better not be some limitation to the resolution?

Mr. HAYS. It is entirely left to the discretion of the President of the United States.

The question recurred on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, and Mr. HAYS tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 40.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SENER. Will it be in order to state to the gentleman from Alabama that the embarrassment with some gentlemen about voting for the resolution arises from the fact that there is no fixed sum appropriated by the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order except by unanimous consent.

The question was then taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 141, nays 68, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Atkins, Averill, Barrere, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Bundy, Roderick R. So the rules were suspended, (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof,) and the joint resolution was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. THOMAS, of Virginia, said: I am requested to state that Mr. SPEER, of Pennsylvania, is kept away from the House by sickness. He has been detained about a week by sickness, and is unable as yet to come to the House.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

INDIANA PRESS DELEGATION.

Mr. COBURN. There is now present in the Capitol a delegation of the association of the editors of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the delegation be allowed the privilege of the floor for the space of half an hour during the session of the House to-day.

Mr. RANDALL. Make it the whole day.

Mr. NIBLACK. I hope there will be no objection to the request of my colleague.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

CLERICAL FORCE OF GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In accordance with the notice which I gave on Friday last, I now move that the rules be suspended and that the House proceed to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1060) to reorganize the clerical force of the General Land Office.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that at two o'clock to-day the House must proceed to the consideration of business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is nearly an hour remaining, and I hope this bill may be disposed of before two o'clock.

NATIONAL CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD. I renew my request that the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, with an amendment by the Senate, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and that the committee have have leave to report back the bill at any time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

POSTAGE ON AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] who desires to offer a resolution.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I offer the following resolution:

That it shall be in order to move as an amendment to the bill making appropriations for the Post-Office Department as follows:

That the postage to be charged on each copy of the annual report of the Department of Agriculture shall not exceed ten cents.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] after the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] is disposed of.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I waive my right long enough to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts to obtain the sense of the House on his resolution.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why he should confine his resolution to this one report?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this should be made in order in Committee of the Whole, would it not also then in Committee of the Whole be in order to move that this report should be sent free?

The SPEAKER. Of course it would. Any germane amendment would necessarily be in order if this is made in order.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the question on seconding the motion for the suspension of the rules to be taken by tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. TYNER, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. E. R. HOAR.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 107, noes 40.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 22, noes 84.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this amendment should be made in order, would it be in order to amend it?

Several members called for the regular order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, noes 46, not voting 90; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Waddell, Wallace, Whitehead, Whiteley, Whitthorne, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—154.

NAYS—Messrs. Barber, Barry, Bradley, Burrows, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Crossland, Crounse, Danford, Dawes, Frye, Garfield, Eugene Hale, Hancock, John B. Hawley, Houghton, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Lawson, Lynch, Milliken, Niles, O'Neill, Orth, Packard, Hosea W. Parker, Rainey, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Small, Smart, John Q. Smith, Sprague, Starkweather, St. John, Stone, Tyner, Waldron, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Charles W. Willard, and George Willard—46.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Averill, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Begole, Berry, Buckner, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Conger, Cox, Creamer, Crocker, Crooke, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Hamilton, Harmer, John T. Harris, Hathorn, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Hersey, Hooper, Howe, Jewett, Kelley, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lansing, Leach, Lewis, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, Martin, Maynard, McJunkin, Mellish, Morrison, Nesmith, Niblack, Page, Phelps, Pike, James H. Williams, Wilshire, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—90.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF NEW MEXICO.

On motion of Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the report of the Committee on the Territories on the subject of the admission of New Mexico be reprinted.

CLERICAL FORCE IN THE LAND OFFICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 1060) to reorganize the clerical force of the General Land Office.

Mr. COTTON. Is this a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill or to bring it before the House for consideration?

The SPEAKER. To bring it before the House for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the House will be informed how much time is to be allowed for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If my motion be sustained I am willing that there shall be any amount of discussion that the House may be willing to allow.

Mr. HOLMAN. The business of the District of Columbia comes up at two o'clock, and the gentleman will have to call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. McKEE. I desire to submit an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House. The motion is to suspend the rules and bring it before the House for consideration.

Mr. McKEE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow my amendment to be read for information.

Mr. PARSONS. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will not the bill have to go to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, as it involves an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. The bill contains provision for new officers, and involves expenditures of money; but if the House suspends the rules, the rule requiring it to be referred to the Committee of the Whole will be waived.

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division, there were—ayes 28, noes 50; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. TOWNSEND were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 75.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

PAYMENT OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. SENER. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That it shall be in order when the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, now pending in Committee of the Whole, is being considered therein, to move as an amendment thereto, to come in as an amendment to the second section, the following:

For pay of claims of mail contractors in the late insurrectionary States to themselves, their heirs, or legal representatives for carrying the mails in said States prior to May 31, 1861, such claims for said service as have been certified according to law by the contract office of the Post-Office Department, and which may now be audited and allowed by the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury as due and unpaid, the sum of $329,564.19: Provided, That each claimant of sums so due and unpaid upon contracts as aforesaid be required before receiving payment of his or her claim to make oath that no part of said claim has been paid by the so-called confederate government: And provided further, That no oath of loyalty during the rebellion as a condition of payment shall be required of said claimants.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest to the gentleman that instead of the 31st of May the date shall be the 14th of April.

Mr. SENER. I will modify the resolution in that way.

Mr. TYNER. I hope the House will vote down the motion.

The question was taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 65; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. SENER and Mr. TYNER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 70.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred upon the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Mr. SENER. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 93, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barry, Beck, Bell, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Benjamin F. Butler, Caldwell, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Duell, Durham, Eldredge, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Hagans, Hancock, Henry R. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Averill, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Begole, Berry, Burleigh, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Conger, Cotton, Creamer, Crocker, Crooke, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, DeWitt, Dobbins, Eden, Elliott, Field, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, John T. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Hersey, Hooper, Howe, Jewett, Kelley, Kellogg, Killinger, Lamar, Lamison, Lansing, Lewis, Marshall, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, James W. McDill, McJunkin, Mellish, Morey, Myers, Page, Parsons, Pendleton, Phelps, Pike, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Pratt, Rapier, Richmond, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, James W. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodford—97.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, is absent by leave of the House on account of sickness in his family; if here he would vote "no."

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BEGOLE, is absent; if here he would vote "no."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, this being the third Monday of the month, by a rule of the House lately adopted, the Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COTTON. Several gentlemen have asked me to yield for propositions which would give rise to no debate.

JOSEPH WHEELER.

Mr. SLOSS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3406) to relieve Joseph Wheeler, of Lawrence County, in the State of Alabama, from all legal and political disabilities; which was read three times and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ARBITRATION.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with leave to report at any time:

Resolved, That the President is requested by this House to provide in future treaties between the Government of the United States and foreign powers, whenever practicable, that war shall not be declared by either of the contracting powers against the other until an effort shall have been first made to settle the alleged cause of offense by impartial arbitration.

SCHOONER JACOB FAITHFUL.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3407) to change the name of the schooner Jacob Faithful to the Eyvoe; which was read three times, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to report at any time upon the bill referred to-day to them, fixing the time for the congressional election in Pennsylvania for the Forty-fourth Congress.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have Saturday next, after one hour from the reading of the Journal, to make reports. We have a large number of bills relating to courts and other matters before us, and it is very necessary that we should have an opportunity to report upon them.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I hope the gentleman will fix on some other day than Saturday. I have some reports to make, but I cannot be here Saturday morning.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We will be antagonized by special orders on any other day.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Take some day next week.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will say Tuesday of next week.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to antagonize the Committee on the Judiciary, but they have already had three days, one extra.

Mr. POLAND. O, no.

Mr. DAWES. They have had two days, and leave to report at any time on several subjects. What I desired to say was this: I will not oppose this proposition, but I must ask privilege for the Committee on Ways and Means to report some day on matters not privileged; say Tuesday of next week.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That committee is next in call, is it not?

Mr. DAWES. I know we are, and we have been for three weeks.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Why not bring in your reports, then?

Mr. DAWES. Because the business of the House has been such that I could not force a morning hour.

The SPEAKER. It is very difficult at this period of the session, with the number of reports authorized to be made at any time and the privileged reports, to force a morning hour.

Mr. DAWES. I have been trying to force a morning hour for the Committee on Ways and Means for three weeks. I would like to have Tuesday of next week for our committee.

Mr. RANDALL. If your committee is next to be called, why not take to-morrow?

Mr. DAWES. Unfinished business will come up then, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask next Saturday for the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I must object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I will say Friday.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Let next Tuesday be fixed for the Committee on the Judiciary. I think we should have a day as early as that.

The SPEAKER. Say Tuesday of next week for the Committee on Ways and Means, and Wednesday of next week for the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Very well; I will agree to that.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that Saturday next, one hour after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for reports from the Committee on Military Affairs. We have had no opportunity to report for some time, and have a great deal of business before us.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

L. L. LOMAX.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for consideration at this time a bill to remove the disabilities of L. L. Lomax, of Virginia.

Mr. MAYNARD. What is the use of peddling out amnesty in this way? We passed a general amnesty bill and sent it over to the Senate; and I trust it will be acted upon. It seems to me invidious to take up individual cases in this way. I have no doubt this is as meritorious a case as any.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not like to object to this bill. I introduced the original bill and favor it. Gentlemen around me make suggestions privately which I am not at liberty to mention publicly so as to go upon the record why this bill should pass. I will not object to it.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 3408) was introduced, read three times, and passed; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

STAMPING OF UNSTAMPED DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WHITELEY. I ask unanimous consent to put on its passage at this time a bill to provide for the stamping of unstamped instruments, documents, and papers.

The bill was read.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHITELEY] will modify his motion so that the bill may come before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITELEY. Would it be in order to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the House proceeds to the consideration of reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

BRIDGE OVER ANACOSTIA RIVER.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a bill (H. R. No. 3409) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge. I suppose this bill will be subject to the objection that it makes an appropriation. If the House desires to send it to the Committee of the Whole, of course it will go there. But I ask for the reading of the report as well as the bill.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of War to cause to be constructed across the Anacostia River, at or near the present navy-yard bridge, an iron bridge and causeway; and it appropriates $146,000 for this purpose; but the Secretary of War is not to expend any money for the building of this bridge unless he shall first satisfy himself that the same can be built for the sum appropriated in the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose that this bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose the point of order will lie, if the gentleman insists on it. But I would like to have the report read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of the report will not waive the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

The Clerk read the report. It states that the committee have had under consideration the memorial of certain citizens of the United States respecting the necessity for rebuilding the Government bridge near the navy-yard across the Anacostia River, as reported by the committee at some length in a report of the present session. The committee report that they have not changed their opinion as to the necessity for Congress making a sufficient appropriation to rebuild said bridge. But in view of the expression of the House on a former occasion that the sum heretofore recommended was too great, the committee have caused a careful survey and estimate to be made for a less expensive bridge than then recommended; and they now recommend to the House the passage of the accompanying bill, which provides for an appropriation sufficient for the erection of a substantial iron structure supported by stone piers resting upon piles to be constructed substantially in accordance with the plan dated April 18, 1874, and explanatory letter now before the committee. According to the plan and report, the details and items of expense as estimated by John A. Partridge, civil engineer, will be as follows:

Bridge superstructure of wrought iron as per plan attached; seven spans, each one hundred and twenty-five feet long, having clear roadway twenty-four feet wide, and with footway on each side; flooring of oak plank; the bridge to be sixty feet above mean low tide at channel.

Piers and abutments of stone masonry upon foundations of piles and timber; foundations to be protected by loose rubble-stone placed in and around the piles; timber to be placed one foot below low water.

Causeway of earth-work having gravel roadway thirty feet wide between curbstones with brick sidewalks and paved gutters; the slopes of causeway to be faced with stone walls resting upon rubble foundations, to be extended four hundred and seventy-five feet beyond the end of present causeway.

Estimated cost of bridge and causeway.

Iron bridge superstructure, 875 linear feet, $74 a foot	$64,750
Stone masonry in piers and abutments, including foundations	30,196
New causeway, including slope walls	36,100
Old causeway reconstructed	5,850
Washington approach, foot of Eleventh street	1,950
Contingent expenses—superintending, engineering, &c	6,848
Total cost	145,694

This plan is the result of careful examination and estimates by a competent civil engineer, and accompanying the report is the offer by a responsible bridge-builder to construct it for the sum named in the bill, to wit, $146,000.

The ownership of the present bridge being in the United States its importance to the Government as the channel of supply for its Insane Institution and its forts, and the present dangerous condition of the old decayed structure, as well as the general advantage to the people at large, impel the committee to urge strongly some favorable action at the present session of Congress.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If any gentleman makes the point of order, of course this will have to go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I hope, however, gentlemen are prepared to consider the bill now. It is a most important matter. This bridge is in a dangerous condition. I should for one, knowing what I do in regard to it, feel reluctant to take the responsibility of this bridge falling, and the destruction of human life which might follow as a consequence. I hope gentlemen will consider it now. If gentlemen do make the point of order, I ask that the report be printed so we may have it before the House.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the Committee on the District of Columbia having Monday instead of Friday suggests some intimations in regard to the present rule which may be important. The regular time for receiving reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia, although on Monday, yet the Chair would hold a motion to suspend the rules would not apply to such reports, but the committee would have to take its opportunity to move to suspend the rules on some other Monday, as any other committee.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Could they not have the opportunity to suspend the rules by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. This day being fixed for the reception of regular reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Chair would hold that under the rule the committee could not take advantage of reporting on Monday to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not contemplated when the rule was changed that the committee should have the power to move to suspend the rules while making their regular reports on Monday.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania states, that was not in contemplation when the change was made.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The report presents the case to the House and the responsibility is on them. I of course know the point of order sends the report to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The House, however, must be judge of the propriety of doing that.

Mr. NEGLEY. I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce. That committee has had control of the construction of bridges over navigable streams.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania well knows that to refer it to the Committee on Commerce would be simply to defeat the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made, the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask that the bill and report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The same rule applies which applied heretofore where a bill is reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the point of order being made it is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If the House goes into committee on that day it will be the first bill in order, so that it gives the Committee on the District of Columbia the opportunity, if they choose, to consider it on that day.

GEORGE F. RIDER.

Mr. RICE. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report back a bill (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of George F. Rider, and to move that it be referred with the accompanying papers to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

COLUMBIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. RICE, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3154) amendatory of the act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1871, with the recommendation that it do pass with an amendment.

The bill was read. The first section provides that the act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1871, be, and the same is thereby, amended so as to extend the rights under said charter giving the said company the right and power to lay down a single or double track railway, with the necessary switches and turnouts, on, through, and along the following avenues, streets, and highways in the city and county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, subject to all the provisions and regulations of the original charter and amendments thereto, commencing at the eastern terminus of Maryland avenue, now the eastern terminus of said company; thence along Maryland avenue westwardly to its intersection with North B street; thence along North B street to its intersection with North Capitol street; thence along North Capitol street northwardly to its intersection with H street north, with the right to run public carriages thereon drawn by horse-power.

The second section provides that should a majority of the stockholders so elect at any time within three years after the completion of said extension of said railway as is hereinbefore provided, the said company shall have the right to extend said road, either with a single or double track, with the necessary switches and turnouts, along the line of North Capitol street from its intersection with H street north to its intersection with Lincoln avenue, in the county of Washington; thence along Lincoln avenue to its intersection with the county road leading to the Old Soldiers' Home, thence along said county road to the gate at said Old Soldiers' Home, receiving therefor a rate of fare not exceeding five cents a passenger for any distance on said extension of said road; the carriages on the extension of said road or roads to be propelled either by horse-power or any accepted improved noiseless propelling power that may meet the approval of the authorities of the District of Columbia.

The third section provides that section 9 of the original act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the capital stock of said company shall not be less than $100,000 nor more than $800,000.

The fourth section provides that said Columbia Railway Company shall have the right of running on and over the tracks of any other company (with their carriages) that may have tracks laid on any of the avenues, streets, or highways along the route hereby granted, provided said Columbia Railway Company pay to any company (that may have their tracks laid down and being used by them) a reasonable portion of the cost of laying down and keeping said track so used by said Columbia Railway Company in good order and repair.

The fifth section provides that all acts and parts of acts heretofore passed which are inconsistent with any of the provisions of the act be, and the same are, for the purposes of the act, hereby repealed so far as the same are inconsistent therewith.

Mr. RICE. I am instructed by the committee to move the following amendment to that bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 5:

Provided, This act may be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I notice this bill provides for the repealing of all acts which may conflict with this act. Now what will be the effect of that repealing clause? Why should there be any such provision included at all? If there be no necessity for such a provision in the bill it ought not to be there. It may repeal the charter and privileges of some other railroad. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will state the necessity for any such clause in the bill.

Unless the gentleman can give some reason why that last section should be in the bill, I move to strike it out with the exception of the proviso just adopted.

Mr. RICE. I have no objection to that whatever.

The amendment of Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, to strike out the last section, with the exception of the proviso, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEFECTIVE TITLES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. LOFLAND, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported as a substitute for House bill No. 2511 a bill (H. R. No. 3410) to cure defective titles in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the title to all real property lying and situate in the District of Columbia which has vested in the United States by escheat per defectum sanguinis, in cases of persons heretofore held in slavery, be, and the same is thereby, vested in the children of such persons and in the descendants of such children, if deceased; and such children are thereby capacitated to inherit one from the other or others, in the same manner and to the same extent as if born in lawful wedlock.

The bill in its second section provides that whenever conveyances have been made by any person or persons having defective blood as aforesaid, the party or parties purchasing under such conveyances, their heirs and assigns, shall have the same title under the law as the grantors in such conveyance, would have had or could have acquired under the act.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of the bill.

Mr. LOFLAND. Mr. Speaker, I will say in explanation of this bill that the common-law doctrine prevails in the District that whenever a party died intestate seized of real estate, leaving no heirs, the estate of such person escheated to the United States. Now, under the law, slaves were not allowed to contract marriage, and consequently their children being born out of wedlock had no inheritable blood, and though free themselves could not inherit from each other. The United States never availed itself of this law, and the property acquired by former slaves remains in the main in the possession of their children, though the legal title is in the Government. But if some person, having no title whatever, was to get into possession, an action of ejectment would not lie on the part of the children of such slaves, because the title being in the Government it would only be necessary for the defendant in such action to plead this fact to defeat the recovery of the claimant, as the claimant would necessarily be compelled to recover on the strength of his own title. This bill is intended to cure this defect. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not know how much attention the committee may have given to this bill. But it occurs to me that this is a bill very important both in the amount of property that may possibly be affected by it and also in the principle which the bill seeks to establish. And it occurs to me that the bill ought to have the consideration of the Judiciary Committee. I do not desire to antagonize the bill, so far as its future operation is concerned, so far as it provides that the persons of defective blood spoken of here may convey property hereafter, or that their descendants may inherit property. But this is retroactive in its operation, and there is no statement here to show what property may be affected by it, what titles may be disturbed by it, or in what way this is going to operate. Without meaning to antagonize the bill directly, it occurs to me that it should have the consideration of the Judiciary Committee. Unless therefore there is some immediate necessity that the bill should pass—and that I cannot see—I would move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Will the gentleman from Vermont allow a letter in relation to the necessity for the bill to be read?

Mr. ARCHER. I ask the gentleman from Delaware if the bill is open to amendment? I think there ought to be some provision in it that it should not affect cases now pending.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. Where does this bill come from?

The SPEAKER. It is reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York. I think it is certainly very extraordinary that a bill of this nature should come from the Committee on the District of Columbia. Such a bill as this should come from the Committee on the Judiciary, and I think there can be no question about the propriety of its being referred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order if the House should refuse to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the gentleman from Delaware will consent that the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I understood the Delegate from the District to ask for the reading of a letter. Let that letter be read.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I presume there is no necessity for the immediate passage of the bill, and there can be no objection to the Judiciary Committee examining the question; but I ask that a letter, on which the bill is based, sent here by an attorney at law, be read, that it may go into the RECORD along with the argument of the gentleman who reported the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith a draught of bill I spoke to you about two weeks ago. The bill necessarily assumes the concession of two legal propositions, to wit: First, that if a person dies seized of lands in the District of Columbia intestate and without leaving heirs, the land escheats to the United States; second, that slaves cannot contract a valid marriage, and hence that children of slave parents, even if free themselves, cannot inherit from each other, not having inheritable blood. These two propositions cannot well be controverted. For the first see Greenleaf's Cruise, (volume 3, page 198, in notis and cases there cited:) Hall vs. Gittings, (2 Howard, 112,) and Sewell vs. Lee, (9 Massachusetts.) For the second, see opinion of Daniel Dulaney in 1 Harris & McHenry, (appendix, page 559.)

The United States has merely the legal title to such property, and does not enjoy the possession which is controlled by the children of the persons heretofore slaves, or by the freedmen themselves. However, if any of them should be constrained to sue for the recovery of the possession, the defendant in ejectment can thwart the suit by showing title not in himself but in the United States, and then defeat the recovery. This, as you see, is very unjust. The colored people should have a remedy, and this act gives it to them.

Hoping that you will introduce this bill, I am, truly yours,

GEO. F. APPLEBY.

Hon. N. P. CHIPMAN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who has charge of the bill intimates that he has no objection to its being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ARCHER. I ask to have the following amendment referred with it:

Add to the bill the following:

But nothing herein contained shall be considered to apply to any case now pending in any court of law or equity in said District.

The bill, with the amendment, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FOUNDRY METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

Mr. HENDEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2738) for the relief of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church, of Washington City.

The bill authorizes the trustees of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church, of Washington, District of Columbia, to sell, for the benefit of said church, the following-described real estate, situate in said city, to wit, the east half of lot numbered 9, in square numbered 158.

Mr. HOLMAN. What has the Government to do with this matter?

Mr. HENDEE. This association was created by the Government and was authorized to acquire and hold real estate, but was not authorized to sell it. They have sold this lot for the purpose of obtaining money to pay their debts, but the purchaser is not inclined to take the title without this act.

Mr. PELHAM. I would suggest, in addition to what the gentleman has said, that when the church was to be built some parties gave money and some subscribed property for the purpose of being sold, and this bill merely enables the intention of the men who subscribed real estate to be carried out.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORPHAN ASYLUMS IN GEORGETOWN AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. PELHAM, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3411) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum in Georgetown, and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia," approved May 24, 1824; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

It provides that section 3 of the act to incorporate the trustees of the Female Orphan Asylum of Georgetown and the Washington City Orphan Asylum in the District of Columbia, approved May 24, 1828, be so amended as to authorize the said corporations or either of them to increase the annual income on the property acquired or to be acquired by either of said corporations, to a sum not exceeding $25,000 per annum.

Mr. PELHAM. I desire to state for the information of the House that these orphan asylums were chartered in 1828 by an act of Congress. At that time there were very few inhabitants in Washington, and it was deemed that an income of $3,000 per annum would be sufficient to take care of all the orphan children of the District and afford them shelter and temporary homes. But the city has increased to a great extent and the number of orphan children has increased in proportion to the population of the city, so that now an income of $3,000 a year is insufficient to carry out the object of these institutions. The bill simply repeals the third section of the act chartering these institutions, which restricts them to an income of $3,000 a year. They only ask to be allowed to increase their incomes to $25,000 a year.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I would add that some bequests have been made to these asylums which cannot be accepted on account of the limitation in the original law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PELHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE LONG BRIDGE.

Mr. COTTON. There have been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia a number of petitions in relation to what is known as the Long Bridge and the draw in that bridge, and I am instructed by the committee to report a bill on the subject.

The bill (H. R. No. 3412) in relation to the bridge across the Potomac River used by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, was read a first and second time.

Mr. NEGLEY. I shall object to the consideration of this bill as coming from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill was read. It requires the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to remove obstructions from the channel and draw through the railroad bridge used by the said company across the Potomac River from Washington City to the State of Virginia, and to cause the channel through the said draw to be unobstructed to navigation for a width of at least sixty-six feet, and provides that in default of the said company complying with this requirement within three months after the passage of the bill, the right of the company to use the bridge shall be forfeited.

The second section requires the company to open the draw in said bridge day and night whenever called upon to do so by any steamer, sailing, or other craft, making the request for the same by signal or otherwise.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object to the consideration of this bill, because it did not properly belong to the Committee on the District of Columbia. This bridge is not wholly in the District, because the river is the boundary of the District.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. NEGLEY. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration must first be settled.

Mr. COTTON. Is that question debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. COTTON. Within no limits?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable at all.

Mr. DAWES. Was not this bill referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. COTTON. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement to the House.

Mr. NEGLEY. I have no objection, of course, to the gentleman making a statement.

Mr. COTTON. This bill relates to a bridge over which the Committee on the District of Columbia has always exercised jurisdiction, and it also relates to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad which now occupies this bridge under a bill reported from the same committee. There have been referred to this committee petitions from Boston and many other northern cities, as well as from the boards of trade of Georgetown and other cities, and from many owners of vessels that navigate the Potomac River. After our committee had considered this matter for some two months, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICE] prepared a bill to be introduced into this House to be printed and recommitted. When he introduced that bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. NEGLEY,] who now makes objection, asked to have it referred to the Committee on Commerce. That was on the 17th of March last. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICE] at that time objected to that reference. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said that if the bill could then be referred to his committee he would have it back before the House in time for action on the day set apart for the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was the Friday following. We wish to have some law passed on this subject, and therefore we now report this bill. I ask the Clerk to read the discussion which took place on the day the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICE] upon the question of referring it to the Committee on Commerce, to show what was then promised to be done in regard to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVIGATION OF THE POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. RICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 2543) to secure unobstructed navigation on the Potomac River; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and be ordered to be printed.

Mr. NEGLEY. The bill should be referred to the Committee on Commerce. It relates to the navigation of one of our rivers.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] that this bill refers to the obstruction to navigation by the Potomac bridge. Counsel and parties have been heard very fully on this subject before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and as the question has received a great deal of consideration from that committee, I hope that this bill will be referred to them.

Mr. NEGLEY. It is not my purpose at all to antagonize the bill; but I desire to reserve to the Committee on Commerce its rights in regard to the question of bridges upon the navigable streams of the United States.

Mr. RICE. This subject has been very fully considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and a report upon it has been prepared. It is the object of the committee to bring the bill before the House on Friday next and ask its passage, as the time has now arrived when the passage of such a measure is necessary, as every one must see who is acquainted with the subject.

Mr. NEGLEY. No legislation has been passed by this House for a number of years which has imposed so much hardship upon navigation interests as the construction of bridges across navigable streams. It has imposed on the sub-committee of the Committee on Commerce a labor few gentlemen in the House are aware of. I beg of gentlemen (and I make the request in no querulous mood) to allow the Committee on Commerce to offer their bills with such amendments as experience and the recommendation of the Engineer Department may propose.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Allow me to say that the whole matter of obstruction in the Potomac River has been fully heard before the Committee on the District of Columbia. That committee has had eminent engineers before them. They have had witnesses and counsel before them. They have had a sub-committee appointed to consider the question in every point of view. That committee has been examining it for a month. It seems to me, therefore, that committee, with the report of engineers before them, having heard witnesses and counsel, having considered it, and being now ready to report, should have the consideration of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. NEGLEY. Let the gentleman agree to the proposition I suggested, that this bill shall be referred now to the Committee on Commerce, and I will agree they shall consider it in time to act on it and make such disposition as their judgment may determine.

Mr. RICE. Then I understand there is no objection to the bill being referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COTTON. We had jurisdiction of this matter, because these petitions had been referred to our committee. We now report this bill on the subject. On the 17th of March last, just two months ago to-day, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] promised that if that bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, they would have it back in time for us to act on it on the next District day, which was two days thereafter.

The question was upon considering the bill at the present time; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COTTON] that I am authorized to state that the officers of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company are now making preparations for such changes as they are required by law to make and which the interests of commerce demand. The House will act upon this proposition in a very hasty manner if they force upon this company the execution of this law without a proper statement to the House as to its conditions and effect. I think there should be no haste in the passage of such a bill.

Mr. COTTON. There is no trouble about the bill at all.

Mr. NEGLEY. The railroad company intends to make all alterations which are required to protect the interests of commerce.

Mr. COTTON. I will explain this bill. The first law in regard to a bridge over the Potomac at this point was passed July 14, 1832. It provided for the purchase by the United States of the old bridge at that time over the river, and appropriated a sum of money to construct a new bridge. It provided that the draw in the bridge should be sixty-six feet wide. Then, on the 13th of March, 1833, a further appropriation was made; and on the 30th of June, 1834, an act was passed reducing the appropriation and providing that the draw at the southern channel of the river (that is the draw to which the pending bill relates) should not be less than sixty-six feet wide, and the draw of the northern channel thirty-five feet wide. That was when the bridge was a Government bridge. On the 21st of June, 1870, Congress enacted the following:

That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to extend their lateral branch, authorized by the act to which this is a supplement, and by former supplements to said acts, by the way of Maryland avenue, conforming to its grade, to the viaduct over the Potomac River, at the city of Washington, known as the Long Bridge, and to extend their tracks over said bridge, and connect with any railroads constructed, or that may hereafter be constructed, in the State of Virginia. To effect these purposes the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company are hereby authorized and empowered to take possession of, hold, change, and use the said bridge, and the draws connected therewith, in perpetuity free of cost: Provided, That the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company will maintain in good condition the said bridge for railway and ordinary travel; and the bridge shall at all times be and remain a free bridge for public use for ordinary travel: And provided further, That the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall erect and maintain the draw-bridges, so as not to impede the free navigation of the Potomac River, in efficient working condition at all times; and that until such time as the needful changes are made to accomodate railroad and other traffic, as contemplated by this supplement, it shall be the duty of the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company to repair without delay all damages to the present bridge, and maintain it without cost to the United States: Provided, [That] said railroad company shall give other railroad companies the right to pass over said bridge upon such reasonable terms as may be agreed upon, or Congress prescribe.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company shall at any time neglect to keep said bridge in good repair, and free for public use for ordinary travel, the Government of the United States may enter into possession of the said bridge; and Congress reserves the right to alter or amend this law.

Under that provision Congress might no doubt require an enlargement of the draw; but we are informed that the draw is now obstructed by some piles; and this bill proposes to remove them. I ask that a letter from General Babcock in regard to the opening of this draw in the manner we recommend may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1874.

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 30th ultimo, relative to the draw of Long Bridge, and in reply to report as follows, namely:

1. The present draw of Long Bridge affords a water-way sixty-two feet wide in the clear. The law (see Statutes, volume 4, section 2, page 582, and section 2, page 727,) requires the draw to be not less than sixty-six feet wide.

2. By removing the fender (a line of piles driven along the south side of draw channel) a clear channel sixty-six feet in width, as required by law, can be secured.

3. To the best of my information the vessel requiring the widest channel-way is the Lady of the Lake, which measures from outside of wheel-houses fifty-eight feet. The other vessels passing through, propellers and sailing, have a width of beam varying from thirty-three feet to the smallest sized vessels.

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. E. BABCOCK,
Colonel of Engineers, United States Army.

The COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
House of Representatives.

Mr. COTTON. This bill proposes to remove those piles and open the draw sixty-six feet; and it is further provided that the bridge shall be opened during the night on signals from vessels as well as during the day-time.

Mr. MYERS. Not long ago I presented memorials from owners and masters of coasting-vessels interested in the navigation of the Potomac River, (among others the Vessel-Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, the latter alone representing over $12,000,000 of capital,) stating the great risk and peril to vessels passing through this draw-bridge at the Virginia channel of the Long Bridge over the Potomac, and asking that Congress require said draw and bridge to be altered to accommodate the increasing trade; the water-way of the draw to be enlarged to the full legal width and the draw to be opened at any hour upon reasonable signal from vessels. This bill, which comes up unexpectedly to me, may be all right, but I wish to know whether these memorials have been considered and whether the bill embodies that which is so much desired by the petitioners in the interest of navigation and commerce.

Mr. COTTON. Some of the memorials ask for a draw of one hundred feet, which would necessitate the reconstruction of the bridge. The committee have gone only so far as to report a bill to remove the obstruction to the old channel and to provide that the draw shall be open by night as well as by day.

Mr. MYERS. Will that remove the ground of the complaints heretofore made?

Mr. COTTON. I believe the commissioners are satisfied with this measure; at least it is some improvement.

Mr. MYERS. A step in the right direction?

Mr. COTTON. Yes, sir; and it involves no trouble to the company. It does not affect the structure of the bridge, but provides for removing the piles which now, as General Babcock says, obstruct the channel.

Mr. MYERS. I am afraid the bill does not go far enough; but, as I understand the gentleman, it is all we can get at present.

Mr. COTTON. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COTTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. COTTON. There are no further reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

STAMPING OF UNSTAMPED DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WHITELEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] withdraws his objection to the bill which I asked to have passed a short time ago, to provide for the stamping of unstamped instruments, documents, or papers.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read. It provides that all instruments, documents, and papers heretofore made, signed, or issued, and subject to a stamp duty or tax under any law heretofore existing and remaining unstamped, may be stamped by any person having an interest therein, or, where the original is lost, a copy thereof, at any time prior to the 1st of January, 1866. And said instruments, documents, and papers, and any record thereof, shall be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped when made, signed, or issued; but no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument, document, or paper, or copy thereof, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is quite manifest that this is a very proper measure; but I would suggest the propriety of inserting 1878 instead of 1876.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection that modification will be made, and the bill as thus modified will be passed.

There was no objection; and the bill (H. R. No. 3413) was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHITELEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTURBANCES IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. POLAND. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker who shall be charged with the duty of inquiring into the disturbed condition of governmental affairs in the State of Arkansas, and to ascertain whether said State has a government republican in form, the officers of which are duly elected, and as now organized under the Constitution ought to be recognized by the Government of the United States; and for this purpose said committee may proceed to said State, send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, and have leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 64, noes 48; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POLAND and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 64.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurring on the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. RANDALL called for tellers.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. We may as well have the yeas and nays at once. I call for them.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NIBLACK. Will the gentleman from Vermont consent to include South Carolina in his resolution?

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NIBLACK. It needs it quite as much as Arkansas.

Mr. RANDALL. It would not hurt to have Louisiana in.

The question was taken; and decided in the negative—yeas 93, nays 105, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bradley, Bromberg, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clements, Stephen A. Smith, Speer, Standiford, Stephens, Storm, Strawbridge, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Townsend, Wheeler, White, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, and Woodford—92.

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the vote,

Mr. VANCE said: I am requested to state to the House by Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, that he is absent on account of sickness.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA INVESTIGATION.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the joint committee to investigate into the affairs of the District of Columbia be allowed to report at any time for consideration in the House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EVENING SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am requested by several gentlemen who wish to speak to move that to-morrow evening a session be held for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

BUDD'S INLET AND PUGET SOUND.

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask unanimous consent to have put on its passage at this time the bill (S. No. 253) to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet to Puget Sound, to intersect the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Tinino.

Mr. PARSONS. I object.

SOLDIERS' BOUNTIES.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing a bill granting bounties to the heirs of soldiers who enlisted in the service of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion for a less period than one year, and who were killed or who have died by reason of such service.

The bill, which was read, provides that the heirs of any soldier who was killed or died while in the military service of the United States, in the line of duty during the war for the suppression of the rebellion whose period of enlistment was for less than one year, or who shall have since died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while in such service, shall be entitled to receive the same bounty as if said soldier had enlisted for three years, provided the heirs so entitled shall be such only as are named and in the order named and upon the same conditions mentioned in the first section of the act of July 11, 1862; and provided further that nothing in the act shall authorize the payment on account of any soldier who has received bounties from the Government of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from New Jersey will use the words "for one year or for a less period," otherwise it will cut out quite a number.

Mr. COBURN. This whole subject has been before the Committee on Military Affairs. They have a bill ready to report covering these and all other possible cases, and have leave to report on next Saturday. It would be an act of injustice therefore to that committee, having thoroughly considered the matter, to attempt to pass this bill in this shape at this time.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. The gentleman is mistaken in reference to this being the same bill.

Mr. COBURN. It is not the same bill, but the bill of the committee covers this subject as well as all other cases of the kind.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The very fact that this is not like the bill which the committee is to report is the reason why it ought not to pass.

Mr. MYERS. The motion is only that the bill be brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The Committee on Military Affairs have considered this subject carefully, and a day has been set apart for the consideration of the bill they are prepared to report. This is certainly a matter of too much importance to be passed in this way under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman makes a mistake. As I understand the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey, it is not for the passage of the bill under a suspension of the rules, but to bring it before the House for consideration.

The question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 41, noes 81; no quorum voting.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. I ask for further count.

The SPEAKER A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. WARD, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. COBURN.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 50, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

REPORTS OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I now renew my request that one hour be assigned to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads on Saturday week after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded that on Saturday week the House will probably not be in session, as it is the 30th of May, decoration day.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I will say Friday, the 29th.

The SPEAKER. That will be objection day.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I ask that Saturday, the 6th of June, be assigned to the committee.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I shall not object to that arrangement being made, provided it is accompanied with the condition that the committee shall not report a bill reviving the franking privilege in whole or in part.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Cannot a bill to repeal the law abolishing the franking privilege be moved as an amendment to the amendment to the post-office appropriation bill made in order by the resolution adopted this morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then we are all right.

Mr. MYERS. That is the reason I voted for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I object if there is to be any limitation.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I object absolutely.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The question is on seconding the motion so to suspend the rules that Saturday, the 6th of June, one hour after the reading of the Journal, shall be assigned to reports from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 103, noes 43.

So the motion was seconded, and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the order was made.

RECONSIDERATION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move that all votes by which the several orders for the assignment of business have been made to-day be reconsidered, and I also move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTAGE ON PRINTED MATTER.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3414) to provide for the prepayment of postage on printed matter, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD FROM BUDD'S INLET TO TENINO.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 253) to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to intersect the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Tenino.

The bill provides that the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, be, and they are thereby, authorized and empowered to contract with any legally authorized corporation or individuals, to construct and equip a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to connect with the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Tenino, all in the said county of Thurston, and to issue bonds of Thurston County in aid thereof, which bonds shall bear interest not exceeding 10 per cent. per annum, and the principal thereof shall not exceed in amount 10 per cent. of the value of the taxable property of said county of Thurston as legally assessed for territorial taxation, and shall not in any event exceed in the aggregate $200,000, notwithstanding this sum may be less than 7 per cent. of such taxable valuation; and any such bonds issued in excess of said 7 per cent. of the territorial taxable valuation of the property of said county, or in excess of $200,000 in the aggregate in any event, shall be absolutely void; and all persons interested are required to take notice thereof. And the said commissioners are thereby authorized and empowered to designate the time and manner of payment of the principal and interest of said bonds, and also to determine the class and gauge of said railroad; provided that no bonds shall issue until the full and final completion of said railroad; and provided further that said county of Thurston shall not contract with any person, firm, or corporation to construct said railroad until such person, firm, or company shall enter into a good and sufficient bond, in the penal sum of $200,000, to be secured by first mortgage on said railroad, conditioned that they will operate said road with passenger and freight trains for a period of twenty-five years; and provided further that when the said county commissioners shall have agreed upon the terms for the construction of said railroad with any individual, firm, or corporation, they shall call a special election at such time as they may designate, by causing three notices of such election, which said notices shall embrace the terms of the proposed contract, to be posted for twenty days in each election-precinct of said county of Thurston, at which the said proposed contract shall be submitted to the legal voters of said county; and if two-thirds of the said votes cast at the said election shall be in favor of the said contract, and such two-thirds shall be equal in number to a majority of the votes cast in said county at the then next preceding election for Delegate in the Congress of the United States, then the said county commissioners shall complete the said contract and issue the bonds provided for by the act, and not otherwise. Such election shall be held at the same places, in the same manner, and the returns thereof made by and filed with the same officers as is required in case of election for county officers under the laws of said Territory.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, there were—ayes 92, noes 28; no quorum voting.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I ask for a further count.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. HALE, and his colleague, Mr. HOSKINS.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 34.

So the motion was seconded.

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. HALE, of New York. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will have the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 22, noes 102; the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering tellers there were ayes 20; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused, the yeas and nays were refused, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill was passed.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] has been recognized to submit a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move to take a recess for ten minutes to enable the democratic party to congratulate the Delegate from Washington Territory on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The House seems to be taking a recess without a motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order before any motion is submitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I made the motion so that their hilarity might continue.

INSANE CONVICTS.

Mr. TREMAIN. I move to suspend the rules and pass bill to provide for the care and custody of persons convicted in the courts of the United States who have or may become insane while imprisoned.

Mr. WADDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 54, noes 76.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then read. The first section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior, upon the application of the Attorney-General, to transfer to the Insane Asylum, in the District of Columbia, all persons who have been or shall be convicted of any offense in any court of the United States, and imprisoned in any State prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory, and who, during the term of their imprisonment, have or shall become and be insane, in case satisfactory arrangements for their care and custody shall not be made by said Attorney-General under other provisions of the act.

The second section provides that in all cases where any person convicted in a court of the United States shall, while imprisoned under such conviction in any State prison or penitentiary, become and be insane, the Attorney-General shall have power in his discretion to contract with any State insane or lunatic asylum, within the State in which such convict is imprisoned, for his care and custody while remaining so insane; and in all cases where such convicts shall have heretofore been, or shall hereafter be, transferred to a State asylum for insane convicts, in accordance with the laws of such State, it authorizes and directs the Attorney-General to compensate the said asylum, or the proper authorities controlling the same, for the care and custody of such insane convicts, until their removal or discharge, in such amounts as he shall deem just and reasonable.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think this is a bill which ought not to pass. We have a national insane asylum which we ought to make use of in cases of this sort. This bill contemplates the employment of State asylums for our prisoners who become insane.

Mr. RANDALL. Who determines the fact of insanity in such cases?

Mr. TREMAIN. It is determined according to the existing law where the party who becomes insane is in prison; if it be in the District of Columbia, then by the laws of the District; if in a State, then by the laws of that State.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object to debate.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I hope the gentleman will allow this matter to be explained. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] if he thinks that we can impose upon the State courts the duty of determining this question of insanity of persons convicted under United States laws? I understand that in many of the States if a prisoner becomes insane after conviction the judge of the State court passes on the question.

Mr. TREMAIN. When the United States law adopts the State machinery it has been held that it is entirely valid. Of course, if the State court should refuse to pass upon this question, different legislation might be necessary. The necessity for the passage of this bill arises from the fact that there are quite a number of convicts under United States laws in the State prison at Auburn who have become insane, and it is necessary that some provision should be made for their custody and care. This bill was prepared by the Attorney-General.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. It seems to me that the bill ought to provide that the United States judge of the circuit or district court should have authority to determine the question of insanity.

Mr. TREMAIN. It is much more simple to adopt the State machinery. It might be difficult to get a United States judge to pass upon the question. If the State officers should refuse to do it, then there might be a necessity for further legislation on the subject.

Mr. POLAND. It is hardly to be supposed that State officers would refuse to act in a matter of this sort.

Mr. TREMAIN. Hardly; it is a matter of humanity and charity.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question was then taken upon suspending the rules; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill (H. R. No. 3415) was passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope before the gentleman makes that motion he will allow me to offer a resolution calling for some information from a Department.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TYNER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, and pending that motion I move that all general debate thereon be limited to half a minute.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the motion to adjourn.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 64, noes 61.

Mr. TYNER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TYNER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 58.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.
